Refore your pots can feel the thorns Of the drift and V. 9. signer your pair can jeet toe town't j Uv. earts and fopp of the words in general, that the fluiddinnels of wicked mean deftruction, often infilled upon, not by Dayld onely in other Plalms, but by Job, and others, upon this argument, is here fee our by a fimilitude; of this, there is no queftion at all. Somuch the context of it felf will inforce, and all Interpreters apprehend it fo. But what is the similitude, and of the meaning, and right ordering of particular words, there is not like confent, as may appear by variety of translations, some of them so unlike to one another, as a man would hardly take them for translations of the same verse. From the word in the Feminine Plural, as it is here, is the chiefelf difference: which as it fignifes pots, (and so indeed most usually Feminine) so, thorns also; in which notion the Masculine is more usual. Which consideration especially, hath moved fome of the most approved, to render the words hath moved lone of the most approved, to renear time worsa sa, hey are here experth, Bafer your pers can feel the thoms, or rather according to the propriety of the Hebrew word, (for shown is a more general word) can feel the branklet; that is, the fire of brambles. In further confirmation, we are referred the fire of brambles. In further confirmation, we are referred by Eccledither 2, where the fair is also proverbilly mentioned; For as the cracking for, funded of thorus under a post. I do not deny but this may be to the purpole; yet it is to be observed withal, that the word there for thorus, is not the fame as is here, but my 1971 by the word are "1971 milly 1972 13: Plain 118. 12. to go are quanthed as the first of thorus; that is, a fire that burns with great noise, and is very fierce for the prefear, but is found in. After our worstend fet the teacher, or fire of teachers, which Before your pots can feel the brambles, (or fire of brambles, which ufeth to be quick, but of little continuance) he shall take them away as with a whirl-wind; fo far Interpreters agree; (those, Imean, that agree in mynth here to be translated olla, or pots) but not in that which follows, which indeed is obfeure: מורחרון both living, and in big wrath: (or, as living, as wrath) is the English here; not much clearer then the Hebrew is. The word in living, properly, is sometimes uled of raw fielh : as I Sam. 2. 15. And because raw fleth and pots have some affinity, many. Interpreters follow that fignification here, and make this sense of the words; That as raw flesh is fnatcht out of the por; or, flesh fnatcht out of as raw hem is marcht out of the por; or, nem marcht out or the pot being yet raw, before the heat of that light bramble fire be come to it; so God, &c. . With this bare, fimilitude, the greater part content themselver. But some go surther, and enemies, and the very jaws of hell, before any hurr come to them. And to help this, they think this 17 (living) may be referred to the bramble; He shell take it away, as it were quich and living; to wit, the bramble; by which they understand the violent persecutors of the godly. Certainly, they are most put to it, that are most accurate upon this place, to make that sence which they like best, to agree with the words. They come off cleareft, in my Judgement, as to the fense, and keep to the words too, not worse then those we have heard hitherto, who taking this ap (living) of the perfecutors of Gods people, (a third interpretation) render the whole verse thus; Priusquam caldaria vestra (vel lebetes) sentiant rhammin : lie vos quast viventes abserbebit ira, (Dei) quast turbine: that is, Before the pats can feel the bramble, so shall the wrath (of God) swallow you up as quick; (or, yet living) as it were with a whirlwind. Were there not a double 100, or, particula השונים במר דור (במר דור במר דור במר דור ל במר דור ל fhould make little question, but that we might rest here, and fpare our labour of feeking further. But the omiffion of this repeated and, wherein tome emphasis seems to lye, which is bare imilitude; to express the suddanness or Gods venge-ance; and some by these young thorm, undersland besides, the troubles and sufferings of the godly, by the persecution of wicked men; this, and what else was faid before of the former, which we shall not need to repeat. In very deed, it hath proved a thorny place to Interpreters; and they that read them diligently, will find as much intricacy in their expositions as they have found in the Text. As for the double 173 wherein, as I have faid, I am most unsatisfied, Junius, of all the rest, gives me best content; he expresses them both, and keeps the emreft of the words. I will not undertake that he onely is in the right: but I think I should do him, and the Reader wrong, if I should not take notice of his version too; which is this; Quam nondum sentientur spine vestre spine cynosbati; tam red. vivam, quam adultam procellet quamque: that is, Before your thorns can be felt; even your bramble thorns: (most sharp and offensive, faith he, in his Notes there: that is, before you can do much hurt) he will drive away, (or, bruife in pieces) every one of them as with a florm; both that which is quick, and that which of them as with a flewn; both that which is quick, and that which side y. Too, Saith he in his Norse, Vurnause yandpase, &c. when thebramble doth flyings, some of the thorns are quick and slive; and slowe and flower withered, and dryed up. For conclusion, I would have the Reader to confider, that is but a provided present, which that in, all allegages, is some difficult investigation to any numeror of dottring, about which is cult investigation to any numeror of dottring, about which is constructed in the superior of the superior which is the construction of the superior which is the construction of the superior which is down one fully flatinged; need

But because as much might be said of every lowed herein by the most, and best of Interpreters, expound lowed herein by the mott, and best of interpreters, expound it; as if it related to the doftrine, or pointed to the use of this Pfalm, the end whereof might be, by the commemoration of fo many victories, and this in particular, granted unto David by God, the teach and convince the most obtlinate and refraby God, to totch and convince the most obtainste and retra-dory, that Gods purpose was to establish him in the realm, and that he had not in vain, or fally boasted of Gods promi-fer. I wonder so wide a conjecture should please any besides the first author. And why might it not be the end of divers other Plalms besides this, that have no such inscription; if orner riams benoes this, that have no interinferinfo, it that be a fufficient argument, as is objected against the first Exposition? For my part, I will not undertake that the same may not be said of some other Plalms, as well as this though not inscribed as this; neither do I conceive that, from the omission in other Pfalms, to be a sufficient argument, as might be proved by divers inflances : but that the purpofe might be proved by divers inflances: but that et le purpole of this, be stack, beer, is to cell us that et le Palm was intended, not for the Church, or Temple onely, but for more public used, and for other church, or Temple onely, but for more public used, and for continuation; and to that end, to be learnt by certain companies, or orders, befides the ordinary Levices and Quitemen; this think by comparing with other like places, where the fance words are found, may be made apparent enough. which is between him that faveth God, and him that faveth. Interpreters understand great and gracious deliverances of the Church, wherein the power and goodness of God, in its wind to the control of th this agreeth with that which tollowers, who are use conjugate of all the ends of the earth, &c. doth not appear. Except we should fay with some, that therefore, the ends of the earth, &c. that is, of all men in general, because such great and miraculous deliverances which God affords unto his Church at such times, and upon fuch occasions, are a means to bring others to the knowledge of God, and of the increase of the Church all the world over. But this (though elsewhere, Pfal. 67.2. That thy way may be known, &c. we have fomewhat to this purpose,) is mey may be gramm, s.c., we nave journement to this purpose, I is here rather witry, then probable: efpecially, when there is no need at all of going for it. By terrible things then in righter-caylelly, (taking rightenium full bere for mercy and goodness, as often already hash been observed, and is here eagain noted by interpreters,) we understand that goodness of God, in general, and those wender ful works of his, extending to all, as is there shewed; and for which the Pfalmist doth so carnessly exhert all men of the world to praife and glorifie God, Plal. 107. Which is made the more probable by comparing with Jeremy 31.35. Thus faith the Lard, which giveth the Sun for a light by day, and the ordinances of the Moon and of the Stars for a light by night : which divideth the Sea , when the waves thereof roar, (qui difrumpit mave, & fremunt fluttus ejus, Junius; the Lord of bolts with Name. But there is not much pro-bability that it should be so. And David, or who ever else is bability that it hould be fo. And David, or who ever effe is mean, might postcally be repredented as tryumphing, in allufon to the cuttoons of other Nations, though there was never any fuch ryumph really, or any fuch endone among the Jews. But the greater number make them to be David own words to God, boully and that holly afteribuph in vidories, and the vidory of former ages, unto him. And then indeed according to the Seriquer phartle, may God be fail to be exalted, or a girtudes high, when he doth execute Judgment upon his enemes, and beliftch his people with temporal funccification before the proper with temporal funccification of the control of the serious phartle. on high. Some would have this afcending of God, to be means of his passing from Egypt, a low Countrey, to mount Sinai, and ahence to Sion. I do not conceive this so likely.

The expertition is very proper-piceastic Gods Word; is his deed. He need but to flesh, and the matter, whatever it be, is done. So Pfal. 33.9, For he shake, and it was done : he commanded, and it should fast. Longinus, a heathen, but one of the most judicious masters of Rhetorick that ever was admired the fublimity of this expression in Mofes: and had Epicurus, the monimity of this expression in Motes: and had Epiturus, that arith-ratefit, well underflood this, he would have forborn his ridiculous objections, (one of his chiefelt grounds for denying of a Providence,) concerning Gods perpetual toyl and fequietted in the Creation, and administration of the worldinquiretted in the Ceestion, and administration of the world-but the Centurion in the Golpiel, he underthood it, (for which he was commended and admired by Chrift,) when he faid to Chrift, Lord, I am not swrite; but these flowlide cone under my reaf, het fleed the word onety, and my forwart flash be itselfed. V. 30. Rebute the company of floar men, the multitude of the balls, &c.] The continuation of so many metaphores, (especially if the first words be translated word for word, the beaft of the reeds, as in the margine,) hath made the verfe to found wither like an Enigna, then ordinary language: the last words

So that all the obsturity is rather in the dresse, then in the matter and fubftance it felf : neither is there any diagreement among Interpreters about the meaning, but what the ambiguity of one word, as we shall see when we come to ir, hath made. But that which I most wonder at, is, that none of the Interpreters, as many as I have feen, take any notice at all of the coherence with the former words and verfe: which an or the constitute of the third work and the state of the last o pole to have built a House unto God. particular words : By, the beaft of the reeds, most understand men armed with spears or arrowes: either of which, either spears or arrowes, the reeds of those Countreys will make. In Latine we know that arundo, (a reed) is common only taken for an arrow. Yet there be, who think by the beat of the reeds. voluptuous, proud, infolent men, may be understood; such as live in fertile foiles, and in great plenty of all things. That reeds grow, and are an argument of fertile foiles, they refer us to Efay 35.7. in the habitation of dragons, where each lay, shall be grasse with reeds and rushes. But the more commonly received interpretation agrees best with that which followes. By bulls, ( which followes) are understood the leaders and chief Commanders; by calves, the ordinary Souldiers and follow-

And by this, they understand men proudly arrayed, with filver in their shoes, or other cloaths. which, then, or in those dayes, though afterwards, as many other things of that nature common and ordinary, might be an argument of great pride and excelle. Or, as some others, which lie in plates of filter; which they understand of beds and which lie in plates of filter; which they understand of beds and seelings; for which they refer us to Esth. 1. 6. & Job 22.24. But this doth not do so well here and the expression is without example. Yet against them that make this DETEND an acculative and translate it fubmittentem te, or fingentem fabricacare, as fome do, Calvins objection is pertinent, that he need not pray against them, if they had already submitted: or mention them as already fubjected, and yet pray against them. But as most Rabbins supply the words, dum supplicet quisque; that is, as we have it here, antikevery one submit bimself; so that objection is prevented, and the sense that is made of it is very proper and pertinent : To submit your selves with pieces of ver, that is, to pay tribute, or to feek peace by prefents. Ethiopia shall soon stretch out her bands unto God ] It may be understood; as Psal.44.20. (or stretched out our hands to a strange god) of the spreading of hands in prayer, as the custome was then, not among the Jewes onely, but in all, or most places of the world. And by the Translation a man might think it were the same word in the Original, here, and Psal. 44.20. but it is not fo. For there the word is was, more commonly tranflated, to firead forth; as t king. 80. 22,38. and Ea. 2.15. when se firead forth ow hands, I will hide time eyes: when ye made many prayers, 80. and here it is, if we transline word har word, Ethispia shall make her hands to run to God. However, though the expression be nor, the meaning may be the same, Or, to stretch out, by offering of gifts and presents; by way of subjection and submission; as most expound it. But it comes nojection and mominion; as more exponent in our codes; all to one. This of Ethiopia was also prophetised by Elsy, 18.7. In that time fault the profest be trought, &c. So much for the author; or infrument rather, and penman : for of the principal author, trument rather, and penman; for of the principal author, the Spirit of God, there is no question; and folong, we need take the lefte cire. But the second queet, concerning the subject, is a matter of more, if not difficulty, yet confequence to the right exposition of the whole Pialm. That the state of the second queence is the right exposition of the whole Pialm. That Christ is the main, is a thing generally agreed upon among all Christians; but whether the onely, is the question. sil Christians: but whether the onely, in the question. These he that one the it a matter of figuta impley; to think that any park of it belongs man Solomon. Genebrard is of the opinion, but not be onely. Yet because if find of much opposition he're, fosiewhat here also stall be added. Themain which is that most fittings in this Palm are too high, to objection is, that most things in this Pfalm are too high, to objection 1s, that most things in this Plaim are too nigh, to belong to Solomon, or any mortal miss. They put 'tog-ther what forever' is of that mature, which indeed makes the greatest part of the Pfalim; and then ask, whether this were literally true of Solomon. But they are much mildaten in their ground, as I cancive. For first, not to speak of the their ground, as I. concuve... For first, nor to speak of the likefigurative speeches in other parts of Scripture, as the Prophets, and eshots, which are many, against which the same may be objected; we say here, that the skyle being specified, and the subject extraordinary, the inauguration, or postical, and the tupice extraordinary, the inaugustation, or welcoming of a King to his throne by shiplicious acalamistors, ample hyperboles might the better become it. How ordinary it is for Poets, even the molt fober, and Orators, upon fuch an occasion to be hyperbolical, who knows not? Or should we fay, that Virgil, that so much admired Poet by all ancients, the greatest wit of his age, (the best age for wits as ever the world knew) that he did not intend his wite as ever the world nemy that he did not intend his Ecloge, Sciente Maye, Rec. truelly and really obles a Gratification discrete, usually and really obles a Gratification circuit, upon the birth of a Noble Romane, much infection to kine, because from eith either and the Son of God much better, and in divers of his expredition, agrees with the prediction of the Prophest spotections for future happy first of the world under the Medias ? That his pen in very deds, analys for growt dame, for directed to fuch expreditions, (whether he had abon out of the Shiple Vestex, or no), that thould fit Chrift for well, and none properly and allereally how him; that of Chrift his birth-day for he writer much about that time) might eye the greated for this month, much about that time) might by the greatest of wits among much about that time) might by the greated of wits among them, who glorid in nothing fo much as wit, as celebrated, bath been I know the opinion of way. Learned and judicious men, to whom I cally judicities. Neither said providence without a good effect; those very verfes, as in all probability, and therefore much prefied by found and the said of the s against the literal tente of this Figure, that because the Holy Ghost had the managing of the whole business, therefore all must literally, be true of Solomon; since that the Holy Ghost had a double intention in it and as it was intended for a carmen Genethliacum, it was fufficient that it fitted then when it was written, according to the nature of the thing, and the prefine receiving, and was not to be fitted to the error of things in fature ages; which would have altered the nature of the thing, and of a Gentilaisum, have onide it a bare prophetic. But befoles, was there not ground for their hyperbolical experitions from Cods own words and expertition concerning $5000000 ? I will be the father, and to prefit on concerning $5000000 ? I will be the father, and to fleat the rep face. And thine short and the father to the standard of t when it was written, according to the nature of the thing, words, as well he might, fince Solomon was his type, to Christ, Heb. 1.5. But that is no argument to me, that therefore Solomon was not immediately intended. And cerfore Solomota was not immediately intended. And crainly those words there; Jhe commit inquist, &c. c sinnot well be applyed to Christ. But that in very deed both here and there, Solomon was the immediate object of the words, may be enade good by good and irrefragable authority, by the application this is made of sill there, and any year, most have, to David and his polertry, Fills. § a, by the Holy Gloth, the right Author; as then, and literally be the Holy Gnots, the nate Author, as here, to there. It was the say then in request, when the literal feels, for want of that knowledge of congues, which hash been fince in the world, was more mythical and hidden, then that we properly call anythical, no expound all things allegorically. In the last, place, for another respect too, I say it is no good conference to suggest from the event, against the literal furnification of the state of the support of the Priefthood should continue in their family for ever; that is, Priethood thould contrible in their family for seer; that is, as long as the Temple is felf; and for so long as that Hierarchie was to continue. It fell out otherwise. How hapned that; God himself will tell us; I faid indeed that thy bouse, and the house of thy father should walk before me for ever.

When I fluid for to the righteom, that he final furth live, &c. And was not this Solomons case? What could be ecc. And was not this botomous cale? What could be done more by any man, 'forfurfrate the promities of God, then was done by Solomon? This he repeated, and found merey in his own person, I will easily believe, though not obliged by any direct Scriptures that I know of: but if he did venent, i was after he had done enough, and more then enough, to bring the cutie of God upon all his poftentity. David histifelf, notwithflanding Gods promities hoften retireated, and to abblueute pasifed unto his, proposed them in his last words to his ton Solomon conditionally; after the state of the Lord by God to walk in the water, that this minit! profer in all then delt, — That the Lord that this minit! profer in all then delt, — That the Lord that this minit! profer in all then delt, — That the Lord that this minit! profer in all then delt, — That the Lord that the state of the thin the state of the state of the thin the state of the state did repent, it was after he had done enough, and more then will not be denied us which needs not much other illustra-tion, then the justifying of the hyperboles of it; which hath been our chiefest aim and busnelse hisherto. And as for the mystical sense, as the words are applyable to Christ, there is nothing of which any man can make any question ; there is nothing of which any man can make any queltion; where of Solomon immediately and literally, but hyperbolically, was intended; it is exactly epplyable to Christ, without any hyperbolic and intent relighed, more literally and trusty, make the colomon; but in a fipiritual funder though, med to fit; shough that on, not without often literal and hithorical accomplishment, as may appear by partial and hithorical secomplishment, as may appear by partial second seco

Again, in awaking, that is, when thou awake it them, fay some, that they may see that they have been all this while but in a dream : that all their greatnesse, and fuppofed felicities was but imaginary. It is no fmall aggravation of their milery, that themselves, before they dye, shall know that they have been deluded all this while, when they thought themselves most happy; which must needs end in great pangs and agonies of soul. Or lastly, in awaking, that is, when thou awakest us, and shalt remove the cloud from beis, when thou avakett us, and flush remove the cloud from be-fore our eyes, that we may clearly fee and differen, he vanity of all worldly things: How quickly this life patient away, and every thing with is, how incondiderable at the belt; and by confequence, how fouthit we are; or, a shindlef fpeaketh atterwards, how foothit we are; or, a shindlef fpeaketh atterwards, how foothit we are; or, a shindlef fpeaketh atterwards with worldly prosperity. Afaph] There is no certainty neigher concerning the author A flepi) There is no carainty neither concerning the author of this pfallm, or concerning the time, when it was compo-fed. First for the author; it is not improbable that Afiph, ho lived in Davidesina, a propher, and the author of four form of those pfallm in this book of pfallm, that have this name perficied, but the occasion of this, having been, as ap-man perficied, but the occasion of this, having been, as appears by it, some notable profunction and devastation of the Temple, such as hapned many ages after in the time of the Babylonish Captivity; and since that, once or twice; this Asaph, that lived in Davids time, could not be the author of Apph, that I wed in Davids time, could not be the author of it. That he should write prophetically so long before, it the oj pinion of some, I know, but grounded upon very listle probability, as I conceive. They that shall read it, and well confider of all particulars, will hardly believe that it is a prophetical style. Others therefore, and those of eminent learning, have rather chofen to refer it to what we read I Sam, 4 of the taking of the Ark by the Philiftines. It is likely that fo judicious a man could have faid more to make this opinion more plaufible then it dork appear to me : but it is little, that he bath faid ; (of which fee mere upon verfe 6.and banners) and lefs do I find in the Hiftory, to which he doth refer us, to perswade me. and hammers 1 Heb. [7] Dy Dy Vox Philistina, (faith a learned man here) ad netandum tempus. His meaning is, that this word being as he deems it, of the Philiftine tongue, by this word being as ne deems it, or the Pinitine congue, by others called, lingua Palellina, was here used of purpose, for an indication of the time; that is, that by that word it might be known in after ages when those things were done, and by whom, which are spoken of in the Platme. Now his opinion is, of which hath been spoken already upon the title of the Plalm, that that taking of the Ark by the Philistines, related Pfilm, that that taking of the Ark by the Philiftiners, related a Sama, and what happened upon it was it that give consilion to all their complaint. The title, ib believe, and name of Afaph there prefix, was his chieffit goods of which fee more there. As for this word, I know no goods at all he had, to fay it was a Philiftine word except he first loke is forgarned, which is the min controverife, and will not think safily the granted by any except his bire authority perswade them, that the Philistines, not Chaldeans, or Grecians, or Romans, are they that are here spoken of. Rabbi Solomon makes the word to be an Arabick word, wherein he is followed by many. Junius makes it a Syriack word, both this and the former , and bath the same observation upon them, in confirmation of his own opinion, that therefore Syriack words, and not Hebrew, are used, ad evidentiorem tempork quo hee gesta sunt desig-nationem. It seems neither of them are elsewhere to be sound nationem. It icems neither of them are elecunere to be found in the Scripture: which makes them to be suspected for strange in the Scripture: which makes them to be fulpefieldefor flrange-words. But that, as I conceive, but a weak argument. For there be many other of that kind, not occurrent above once in the whole Bible, which neverthefels are selmovelleged to be Hebrew. Te shall drink of my cup, &c. to which purpose the ancient Latins were wont to say, Exeden possele bibere; as is found in some of them. But a cup of red possible bluers; as a sound in tome of them. But a cup of real mine, as we have in there is of, swathond fury; as by others is expressed; (as Jen. 15, 15, Revel. 14, 10.) imports, usually, extraordinary judgements of God upon some giear provocation. How here intended best interpreters are divided Som appretend an antithesis in the words, (in this our English observations). ved but the dregs thereof, &c. whereupon they make this sense: That God, the supreme moderator, hath appointed troubles, more or leffe, and afflictions to all men, both good and bad in this world: but that he dealeth them in a certain measure and proportion: that is, to his people, out of his fatherly care over them, afflictions fo moderated and limited, they they care over them, attititions to moderated and immediates they find not be overcome by them, but overcome them to their own further good, and to his glory: (this to be intended by the field part of the familitude; it is fill of mixture, and be pourted but of the familitude.) it is full of mixture] Some make a mystery of this mixture, as though it were intended by this word, That though the godly be not exempted from troubles and croffes, yet they have them tempered by God, with proportionable comforts; and so mo-derated, that they do not exceed the measure of their ability to derated, that they do not exceed the measure or their ability to bear them. A good doctrine, but very weakly grounded upon this word. For certainly they are in the right, who by mixture, understand liquor mixed; that is, fitted and prepared; and now ready for drinking. Who knows not that the Greek xspannoau, and the Latine mifcere, are very commonly fo taken; the reason being, (as many have well observed) because the ancients were not wont to drink wine, nor think it fit to be drunk, (hot wines, and in hot countries especially) before it were mixed and tempered with water? And so we finde the word xepárousau used Revel. 14. 10. The same shall drink of the mine of the wrath of God which is poured out without mixture: Is neueparuses drealou. The words, it translated word for word, would imply a contradiction; mixed without mixture: but the meaning is, as it is well exprelled by the English, poured out: and that without mixture, there, is but an interpretation of what is here termed red wine : and fo indeed

And there I will meet the Sec.] and that the ten Tribes were departed from the worship of the true God that was faid to dwell there, and worshipped Idols; and by confequence had no interest either in the Ark, or in the God of the Ark. they therefore conceive that the ern Tibbe coints here be meant particularly; but by Joffso, they understand all the Tibbes in general, as Plainners, verf. 4: This be notioned in Joffsoh for a tilmony, &c. But the objection is in very deed of little confequence. For if the Pfalmitt may be allowed to ad-dreftle himself both true God, for them that had forther him; t with you as well to the God dwelling in the Aik, or among the Chamilton of the Aik, before an online of the state of the or all they therefore conceive that the ten Tribes cannot here be Cherubins of the Ask; being an ordinary seisbress, or ex-pression of the rue God in the Scripture? Besides, as is well answered by some, though the generality of the ten Fribes had aniwered by fome, stough the generality of the ten Fribes nas fortaken God, 'yet many there were of that divition, who not only had forfaken them locally, a Chr.11.16,17, but also re-maining among them, wothipped the true God in their hearts; a nordid conform to the ourward Idolarous worthip of the reft, 1 King. 19.18. Tet kbare left me from thousand in 1fvael, &c. A greater objection may be, as I conceive, though no notice be taken of it, from the next words, as we shall see

V. z. Refore Ephraim, and Binjamin, and Maniffich, flirre ing thy fivength? Why these Tribes should be joyned; and why these onely mentioned, is a question; and whether all the Tribes in general; (of which fee what hath been already faid Tribes in general; (of which fee what hash been already fails upon the first verify.) or the tern onety; be intended. Thisy that would have all the Tribes included, fay, that it is usual in the Scripture, by naming of four, to underfined all; what the Tribe of Ephraim and Manaffe; before the Kingdome were bretted in the Tribe of Ephraim and Manaffe; before the Kingdome were bretted in the Tribe of Judah; were the chieffel Thiste, being Jofephr spotenty; that the fet alter Tribes, when all the Iface lites, divided into four caugal parts, encamped about the Aris, these made one part, Numa. 17, 18,8c.; and with reference to that ancient relation, though hong after, might probably be named together. And besides this, that Benjamin had a particular relation to the Tribe of Ephraim and Manaffe, because Benjamin and Jofeph were not onely brettien, as all the reft of the Particules, all flows of Jones be useful for suddown as of the Patriarchs; all fons of Jacob: but also openingers, as St. Basil here calls them, fons of one mother. This, upon a supposition that the twelve Tribes in general are the subject of luppoint on that the twelve I ribes in general are the lubject of the fee complaints. But that 10 fome others, men of gener, judgment and I tearning, will not be granted: that all finoid be intended, and yet neither Judds, the very chief (in those dayes) of all the Tibes; nor the Temple, or City, far more confiderable to the Jews in all their joyces of forwards, then life, or any distributions of the transfer o thing elfe, should be mentioned. But they that object for frongly, and in my judgment plaufibly enough, against the former, take no notice at all (which I much wonder at) of one frong objection that may be made against their opinion.
For if the ten Tribes onely, or the fractices, as then called. were here concerned; how comes Benjamin to be named; which was a diffinet Tribe from the Hraelites, and adhered unwhich was a diffice I have from the trienness, and agencied ma-to Juda, when that unhappy division, by the revoled freh Tribes, hapned? In answer to this, all that I can think of (fince I find nothing by others either objected, or answered about it,) that hath probability, is this; That haply the words both of this and the former verse, were some ancient form of prayer, used of old, when they were all one body, cither upon the marching of the Ark, or fome occasion of imminent danger; but an ancient publick formula, whatever the occasion of imminent danger; but an ancient publick formula, whatever the occasion of the occa fron were; and as arrancient form, (which in prayers is ordi-nary, wherein many have been very ferupulous to alter any nary, wherein many have ocen very terupulous to atter, any thing, either words, or matter, though fometimes for the beft;) here used and retained, though alteration of times had, now much altered the cose, So Plal. 68, 1. 40/16, O. God, &c. was an ancient form, as is noted there; and fo again, Pfal. 13 2.8,9,10. Acient form, as is noted there; and to again, 1:10, 13, 2, 3, 3, 10, 22, vife, O Lord, &c. Let thy Prieft, &c. Most Interpreters are for that signification here, and think it must be understood of a wheel, globe, or rowling thing, in a fleep place. But that need not. For the bare turning of a wheel, as it is used in a carr, or chariot, may very aprly expressed the miserable condition of a rest-lesse opinit; and the Grecians to that very purpose use their iene iprite: and the Orecians to that very purpose the their βόμβος, proverbally, which fignifies properly a top, such as boys by scourging make rurn round. thance, who lived in the remote parts of the land, able work wont, according to the Law, Exed, 23.17, thrice every year (be-fides what they might do of their own accord) through fome deferts and wildernesses, and many other difficulties, in many companies together, to repair to the fee-feafts and folemnities in Jerusalem; that these, I say, are the proper subject of this Psalm, or Song: written (as I conceive) in their behalf, to be used or sung by them upon the way, for their comfort and en-couragement. That most pare of the Plaim tends to that purpose, or at least, firs very well, may appear by the most approved Expositions of greatest part of it; why all should not, I see no expolutions of greater part of it: why all thould not, I tee no reason at all to the sontrary. Now upon this supposition, I should say, that these Birds are mentioned, as examples of studious and sedulous creatures, which to compasse their ends, that is, to provide themselves of a convenient place, both of rest that is, to provide themselves of a convenient place, both of reft and fafety to themselves and their young ones, spare no is-lour, but feck far and neer, till they have sped, whether in pri-vate or publish budies; as particularly, the Temple is effet; that the consideration of these, might serve for a poetical (for that must fail be taken into consideration) encouragement, unto these weary Tavellers, to put them in mind, that since all their welfare, both spiritual and temporal, and all their securi-ty, depended on their relation to that house, and their interest sy, depended on their relation to that houle, and their interefal in, and cychofe folemnities, they should not think much of their pains. If any objection can be against this Exposition, it must be from the words, very, 10, where David seems to pray for himself: of which more shall be faid there. But a greater objection, against the common opinion we shall find in the 8. verse. However, I do not peremorily determine: I do but propose, as a thing that may be surther considered of. There be other doubts concerning this verse, which we are now to take into confideration.

where the may lay her young even thine alters, O Lard] Noman can well imagine, how birds should nest in the very alters, if either the strusture, or the daily use of them, and frequency of people about them be considered. But thine alters some interpret, neer thine alters, and suppose there might be trees neer. It is not a very likely supposition; nor much to the purpose, if it Arts not a very lusely supposition; nor much to the purpose, the were so. Except those trees was now; that they should be accounted as part of the altars themfelvers; which would be precisely understood there, according to the expression, to preserve the emphasis of the words. Others therefore by altars here, understand the Temple it self; which would do very well, if it could be consistend by any permitted which would do very well, if it could be consistend by any permitted. tinent examples, where the word altar is fo used. For though in tinent examples, where the word datar is to used. For chough in opinic dworthylader, and temple, might be used promiscourify; yet in a thing that is proper to the temple, that alter should be put for temple, is much more unlikely. Beddes, if the Rabbines tellimony, as in this cast is thould, be confidenable, they precisely deny that any Birds were fulfrend to come into the Temple: neither could, if fulfrend (which perchance would have been difficulte to binder) nother expense. have been difficult to linder) netterere, because of the caven-neffe of the roof. They tell use high places, and altrast there, every where, which they would have the altars here mention-ed. But these to be the object of Davids longing, or of his ex-pression, in reference to those that came from afar off to worthip at Jerufalem, were too abfurd to imagine. The way that hath been found by fome and is followed by most, so cleer all this, is by a different connexion, or fyntax is of the words, leaving out the fupplement even, and taking that which followes, shine altars, O Lord of hofts, &c. as an abrupt and pathetical ex-clamation; as if he had faid: O for thine altars, O my God where, and when shall I be so happy? thine altars, thine altars, &c. Or, making that of the Birds to come in by way o parenthesis, to joyn the latter part of the verse with the se-cond. My foul longeth, &c. which is the way that some of the Rabbines also defollow. The difference is in the coherence of the words: the fense is the same, either of these two last wayes. And since we have so much authority for this cleer way, as the conferr of formany Interpreters, not above one, that I can find and he but faintly, difference; I know no reason, why we should rather embrace that which is more dark, and inextri-

But here is a great question; and they are much put to it, that would have David to have written this plain, when perfecuted by either Saul, or his own Son Absolom, to give a satisfactory. fecured by either Stud, or his own Son Abfolion, to give a fati-factory anform, how Zion comes here to be name. For all Sauls since, the Ark was not there; Zion was then no more; then every ordinary hill. The perfection by his Son I, was Io foom ended, that it flands with little probability, this David hould fo complain for that time of ablence; making to men-tion at all (which is well observed by fome) in all this Pollary, Adda in a share of the probability of the Son I was tion at all (which is well observed by fome) in all this Pfalm; (which no ther Pfalms, when he complains of this ablence for eed by the violence of perfection, he don't at Pfal-3.8. & 3.) of any fuffering in any other kinds at that time; when (upon that fusposition) is fo much danger of lofing both crows and life a one time. nancy, and of different notions. When it is attributed to God. it imports a tendernelle of affection in God, towards all his creatures in general, but especially toward them that have more creatures in general, but efpecially toward them that have more particular relation unto him, by mutual covenants and engements, whether general, or particular, of raidful obedience, and religious wordings on the one fide; of love fivour and protection, on the other. Such a general covenant was the Law, which extended to all the Jewes: and the ovenant with Abraham, is which all the Jewes; or firedites that equal interest. Of a more particular covenant, though we make find diverse after examines were fail not produce for the produce of the covenant was the covenant with diverse after examines were fail an or podes footwe might find divers other examples, yet shall not need to feek further then David himself, that of all others in that kind, being the most express, and most considerable. The first is, that what in Chronicles is exhibited as one fingle Pfalm; in this Book it makes two, (if we may call two, one whole, and part of another) and these two, at that distance one of another, that no suspicion can be of any such coherence, either of words or matter, as we find in some other Plalms, that follow one another: as for example, between the 105. & 106. Besides, that which is fisst here, is last there; and that which is last here, is there first. It is not latt there; and that which is latt here, is there hith. It is not impossible, the AD avid himselferinght afterwards divide, and contrive into a new form, what himself had fith joyned, or joyn afterwards, what he had first divided. Neither would it be a difficult matter to find our a coherence of fense, if we make but one Pfalm of it. However, as it doth nor appear by the but one Plalm of it. here rendred destitute, is thought to signife properly myricaus; tamarisk; by some mistaken, as Herbalists observe, for epichapteath. So indeed the Hebrew word is translated in English, Jer. 17.6. For he shall be like the heath in the defart. And it is likely they intended myrica. Yet I cannot absolutely say, it is a militake: the word tamarisk, would not do fo well there; except we understand it of some wild tamarisk, much like unto heath, (for some tamarisk growes to a great bignesse) to which the description of bumilis and tenuis, that is, low and flender, (as in Virgil, Won omnes arbufta juvant, humilefque myrice t)

But however low and flender, yet they certainly are miftaken, that make it here, berbam bumilem & ab. ranny are mutaken, tran maker neres brown boundern & delfan; as found on Plantame, they might have faid. They also, that confound it with juniper; as some others. All this is avoided by eranslating madassimum, as some; or as other, boundis, (destinct, here;) which certainly is the intention (if not propriety, or proper fignification) of the word here, and agrees very well with the etymology of it: from mudare, that is, to uncover. Some fetching it from a different root, (to wit, אורך) have translated it, vociferantis; others, excitantis fe; that is, of him that cryeth: and, of him that fir-reth up himfelf: but because not followed, we shall not need

This aggravation will not hold according to that common Interpretation, if the dead be nois according to maccommon anterpretation, it the dead be taken here figuratively, for them that have no real being. It is also very possible, that the Plalmist might allude to the very name of Baal Peer. For peger in Hebrew doth fignific a dead name of Bast Peor, For Peger in Arteries donn against a cast corple. As for the word before אונה they provoked; we know it is an ordinary word, when God is in-sended, or plainly spoken of; as for example verte 43, follow-ling, Many times—but they provoked him (1712) with their saynfels, cc. and it makes the matter more probable, because upon this very occasion the word (whether במרך סוד מורך). for they are commonly confounded, and fome make but one of thour.) # PSAL CVII.

The drift and purpole of this Plalmis, to affer the providence of God towards men, against all either absolute atheists, who deny the being of a God; or Epicures, who deny, that God takes any care at all of men, to do them either hurt, or good. Now the Divine providence being two wayes, especially, confiderable; either in that order, (both for the conflancy, and beautiful neffe of it equally admirable) which he hath fet to nature, in things merely natural, which we may call his Creating providence: or, in those things, which in the nature of chances and accidents, because both various and uncertain, (whether to many together, or to every particular man,) happen in the world; whiche may call his executive, or administrative providence: as the first kind was fer out before, in a plalm by it felf, to wir, the 104, plalm; which for the lostinetife, and other ornaments of it, plain; when for the contents, and other triausures of the hath ever been accounted an exquistre piece: [6, is the fe-cond, with much elegancy and fublimity, in this prefent Plaim. Yet all particulars of Gods providence in that kind, are not here handled but fome onely, wherein it is most em-ment, as in faving men in adversity, and fuccouring them in. their manifold necessities and extremities, to which this mortal life is exposed: there being no title among men more glorious, or which commends Religion unto men more, then that of a Saviour and Deliverer. That all people and nations of the world in general, not any one parti-cular Nation, are intended by the Pfalmift, as the object of that Goodness of God which he doth here celebrate and set out, if the tenour of the words and context it felf doth not out, if the tenour of the words and context user do in not unfficiently (which I think it fould) evince; I must appeal to the authority of best Expositors: I do not know any, not of any note at least, that makes any question of it. If any would restrain these things to the Jewish Nation, they must do violence to many particular expressions; but much more do violence to many particular expretitions; put much more wrong to the general floop or the Pialam. And ir may very well be, that the Pialamit might have another aym too, befides whar hath been flewed hitherto, against Atheistand Epicures. It is the opinion of the Jews at this day, as by fome of their gloffes upon Deut. 4.19. may appear, that the providence of God, is their peculiar; and that God hath left all other Nations besides themselves, to the government of the Stars, and inferiour powers, or Angels. It is not improbable, that fome fuch opinion might be in those ancient times too, among fome of them. Such an infatuation there is among many Christians too, who upon a fond persuali-on, that themselves are the only children of God, look upon on, that themfelves are the only children of God, look upon moter men, as tinge that God and nothing tood with: not as creatures, at leaft, within compaffe of his cither love or care: which they wholly, (and, upon that ground, would all worldly goods alfo, their chiefet ayon) ingresses to them felves. This plain is an ample constitution of both; whereby God goodnefs and mercy to all, in all places of the world, whitche lews or Gentles, when they call upon him with bears and affected. Same Objections against the vindicated and affected. Same Objections against the doftrine of this Pfalm we shall meet with, upon some of the following verfes.

CONCERNING

The Argument of this BOOK, and the use of PROVERBS in general.

S the Mother of this Book is easily known by his Name, so samens and frequent upon Holy Records, SOLOMON; and by other Titles and Astributes, as, Son of David, and King of Israel, at the be-ginning t so may the Argument of it as easily, by the inscription is bears, of PROVERRS: a Word and unknown unto any that understand common English: of both which never theless, both of the Auner ungarum nets any, time unergranat common Engasyo; e que une unen accesserage, con o que ele-thor, and Inforption il formwhat more final he field direment in the place. In the ement into it will be wort home labour to look into the Origine, and to form the tright sufe of Proverbs, in general: which to do, as it ought to be savour or cour, me or origine, man to pose user my my or oroccor; my ments, and of different tempers and done, mil par ten upon a confidentiation of differents of times, and age of the world; and of different tempers and judgments of men; as also different kinds, or degrees of swiftenes, according to variety of times 1, the knowledge judgments of men; as also different kinds, or degrees of swiftenes, according to variety of times 1, the knowledge magment of men in all of unferent sinal, or angreet of reflecting the market of inner the local and confideration of which things will very much conduce, at to a right appelentifies concerning the use; so to a right appelentifies concerning the use; so to a right paginate concerning the valuation and estimation of this particular Book.
We will not go for an Adam, and the originals of mankind; of which times there has been and is get great con-troversic among the learned, whether men were then wiself, and afterwards degenerated, as mankind increased: or procerie among the comma, matter men were con myer, and myer with my dom, which in after ages by depress cames whicher that was mans infant-time in pains of bosnelege and worldly wildom, which in after ages by depress cames or presented by deader landing it to would be befides our purpose bere; and elsewhere we have handled it at large, to be a supposed by deader landing it to would be befides our purpose bere; and elsewhere we have handled it at large, Without any such reflexion to Primitive times we say, that the same Country and Kingdome, according to diverin novement, and alterations in matter of government; of peace, or war; of liberty, or fubjection; may have, in fury of events, and alterations in matter of government; of peace, or war; of liberty, or fubjection; may have, in feveral ages, feveral ebbiss and flowings in matter of humane Knowledge, and VV islame, and differ from it felf, as in ontward hape and customes; so in matter of wit, judgment, and capacity, depending most from different education) and so in its wayes, and degrees of wisdome, and understanding.

There was a time among the Grecians, in whom we instance rather then other Nations, because better surnished of ancient records concerning them, then concerning other Nations; ) a time, Isay, when all wisdome (as is ob-(erved someweere by Aristotic) consisted in parables and sentences: and to be the author of a wise saying, was enough to purchase a man in the world both admiration and authority. A Sentence and an Oracle were then thought to lave great afficity, and ordinarily entertained with almost equal honour, and reverence. Either none but trufe that were of high rank and place, took upon themselves (of which more upon Chapter 1 vers. 1) to speak [entences : or if any others did, they were reputed worthy of greatest honours. Some sentences were consecrated in Temples, and attributed to the Gash, because they were thought to suppasse the wisslane of more than to make the processing the more than the processing the suppasse the wisslane of more than to the same that summer than the summer to suppasse the summer to the s passed by, might at the same time, both learn, and admire. Such were those called Equal, mentioned by Plato in one of his Dialogues, erected by Hipparchus; whereof one badthis faying, Slaze Sixaia oporar; that is, Think of righteouineffe as thou goeft along ; or, Practife righteouineffe in thy life and conversation. Inother, Mi) ofther igaratra; that is, Deceive not thy friend. And it is observeable, that such an opinion this Hipparchus had of those his sentences, that to every one of them, as ancient Painters and Statuaries to some of their choicest piece were one, he did add bit Name; Mijuc Ba "1270 pp. Mi olion for. V Phich was not done by him onely, but by some others in the same kind: as by Phocylides, who lived much about that time; not the author of that Holiqua Nobilindo, now extant under that name: a very choice piece otherwise, we confesse; but not of that autiquity : but another Phocylides, of whom there remains but little ; to wit, some few sententions Difficks , bere and there Cattered in ancient Authors; Who also bear witnesse of him, that to every such Diffick bis manner was to prefixe his name, in thefe Words, Kol To At Ganunison: This also is Phocylides his verse, or, sentence. By Which doth appear the simplicity of that age, compared with later times. But that which is much more wonderfull, is the power and efficacy (uch sentences and parables (for they were often joyned) had, to perswade men; as either to reclaim them from some vicious course, or purpose; or to allay passions of either anger, or sorrow, or the like; whereof there be divers examples in ancient Histories: insomuch as some maintained. (of which subject Sencea hath written ove Epifile, or two, , that no other kind of Philosophic was needful, (as particularly, no Exhortations, which we call now, Sermons,) to persuade men to goodnesse, but this kind, which they had known to be so successeful and available in former times. But now was the case much altered, in Seneca's time, and long before: mundo jam ad fummam folertiam perducto; as he fpeaks fomewhere: When moral Philosophy through continual use and exercise. Was become so popular, that every fool, or variet, (see every carnifex as is said in the Comick) could utter in ordinary talk more sentences, then formerly the wisest Philosophers, or States-men in their most serious Discourses. A man would have thought the world, in point of life and morality, through this improvement of knowledge, bould much have amended. But it proved quite contrary. For those sentences, which once, when rare, and of difficult accesse, as it were, were entertained as Oracles, and accordingly wrought upon the soules and minds of men; were now become a mere complement of language, and a delight of the ear onely; without antinfluence at all on the beart; fo that the very name of deplayeros, or fentence focaker, became the name of a jugler, or imposter. Antiqua sapientia nihil aliud quam facienda & vitanda pracepit. Et tunc longe meliores erant. Postquam docti prodierunt, boni desunt, faith Seneca-

From all that hath been (aid, hitherto; concerning these Proverbs of Solomon (not to speak of them as Canonical Scripture, Which is a common confideration; but according to humane judgment, I would inferre particularly. First. that to value them to their worth, we must not consider them by what we see in these dayes, when learning ( fo far as to talk, and make a snew) is become more common then silver was in Solomons dayes, ( I King. 10.21.27. when every pedler can make a Preacher; and many beardlesse boyes out of shops, and from the plough, with little reading, and a great deal of confidence can find words enough (which some call the Spirit) to lead whole multitudes. Certainly had Solomon him elf lived in the e dayes he would have been thought in the indement of many men but a very ordinary man, in comparison of some of these inspired tradesmen, and consident youths. Secondit, that some things are delivered with that simplicity of words, and style, as did well agree with the constitution of those times, to which they have more particular relation, both to please and to profit: though not so well perchance, with that over-ripenesse of wit and subtilty, that most men are born with in this age. But lastly, that if men could withdraw themselves a little from that on wolz, that immoderate hunting after the pleasure of the ear. (of all other senses, the most insatiable : the proper temper, shall I say, or distemper of all learned ages;) and betake themselves to more sober retired reading, with answerable serious meditation, (as necessary, as the very reading it felfs) they may find the power and efficacy of these Proverbs and Sentences, (even of those which as first hearing promise but littles) as much as others have done in sormer ages, to the amendment of their lives, and sieseing of their soules from the bondage of many unreasonable lusts and passions; then which, in very deed, no greater bondage or flavery is in the world

Some things besides whoever shall read these Proverbs, had need to know before hand. First, concerning coherence of matter and words, that they must not look for it though it is very good sometimes, and apparent enough for divers verses together yet it is not to be expetted, as a thing not endeavoured by the Author, Neither indeed was it the fashion in those dayes, to write such things otherwise then loosely and promiscuously. It may appear, as by some others fo by Theognis, one of the Ancientest Gnomologues, or Sentence-Writers now extant, who also lived not many uges after Solomon, and in many things doth agree withhim, as may appear to them that shall diligently compare them together. Tet of the first 9. Chapters for the most part, the subject is but one; to mit, the commendation of mifdom. And became there is not any thing that doth more strongly or dangerously either withhold, or withdraw from she fludy of Wildome, then bad company; but especially, the company of Women; having laid something in the first Chapters of the company of bad men; he doth often infift upon that of women, as the most dangerous of the two. Complex vy intercompany y com makes, are unto yet anyth sport time by women, as not confi, unifercome by the following life for found is implify; and be easily life on their alternments, and the found in the following that are deladed by them, and fall into their nets. The laft Chapter contained to for the mole part the character of a versious woman, and agod wife. In all the treft there is but little character of matter, except (as I fall the reft, there is but little character of matter, except (as I fall the reft, there is but little character of matter, except (as I fall the reft, there is but little character of matter, except (as I fall the reft, there is but little character of matter, except (as I fall the reft, there is but little character of matter, except (as I fall the reft, there is but little character of matter, except (as I fall the reft, there is but little character of matter).

fore) here and there of some few verses, that hang together,

Secondly, that some things, yea many, are often repeated. And this will bring us to a further consideration of the Anthor. That Solomon is the Author of this Book of Proverby in general, is generally acknowledged: but the Author, as David of the Pfalmes, not because all made by him; but because either the maker of a good part; er collector and approver of the reft. It is not to be doubted but that many of thefe Proverbs and Sentences, were homm and sight long before Solomon: so wise and understanding a Nation could nate be wiseless many jobs; and understanding a Nation could nate be wiseless many job; common safety and sentences, which are accounted the best evidence of every Mations wisdome; and thought might have many more then Solomon (guided by the Spirit of God) did think sit to Canonize, by admitting them into his Collection: yet that he would admit of none, is not a thing likely. Of them that were collected by others, as Solomons, but long fince his death, from Chapter 25. to 30. and then of those that bear Aguss Name, Chapter 30. and Lemuels, Chapter 31. fee upon those feveral Chapters. If not all Solomons, then, but partly his, and partly collected by bim, and partly by others, at several times: no wonder, if divers things with little or no alteration, be often repeated. However, Solomon might have some end in it, in repeating some things of purposes We shall find repetitions in that kind in the writings of some ancients. Sed quia nimis indociles quidam, tardique funt, admonendi videntur fapius ; faith one of them. Dicentibus ; Quoufque eadem ? Responde : Ego debeo dicere ; Quonsque eadem peccabitis? Remedia ante vultis, quam vitia definere? Ego verò magis dicam; & quia recufatis, perseverabo. So another.

A third thing very necessary to be observed, is, That there be few moral maximes or sentences, of such cathohick and universal truth, (which is the priviledge of Mathematical Theoremes) as to hold alwayes: or that the contrary should never be true. The reason whereof is well shewed by Aristotle in his Ethicks. If you will have it in the words of an ancient Grammarian, that hath written upon Virgil: Sententiz non semper generales funt, sed interdum pro negotiorum qualitate formantur. As for example; Differ, habent parvæ commoda magna more. A little delaj maj prove a great advantage; faith ont. Semper nocuit differre paratis: Delajes are almayes dangerous; faith another. Both maj betrue, as the matter maj be flased by different cireumstances of time, place, and the like. So our Saviour in the Gospel; He that is not with me, is against me; in one place, Matth. 12.30. And, He that is not against us, is for us, in another, Luke 9. 50. And Solomon himself, in the same place; Answer not a fool according to his folly: And, Answer a fool according to his folly, Prov. 26.4.5.

The reading of Ecclefassicus, and diligent comparing of paralet places, will give light to many obscure places of the Proverbs; which hath made me the more willingly to take

It hath been the opinion of some, as appeareth by the Qualtiones Hebraica, ascribed commonly to Saint Jerome. that all those 2000. before mentioned Proverbs, were comprehended in this Book of Proverbs. The words one of the faid Book (whoever be the Author of it) to this purpofe cited by Cornelius a Lapide, are: In Proverbiis versus nongenti quindecim continentur: in quibus etiam continentur tria mille parabola.

The Ancients indeed were wont to divide all Books into verses, and by the number of verses to estimate their bulk and bignesse; of which much hath been written by latter (flicke). But how 3000, parties can be contained and 1915, verifien (laking veries for lines, as they did;) I cannot imagine; but rather believe there is an errour in the Copy. But if not in the Copy; yet, however, an errour in the man, certainly, if ever any did so believe, or write.

Hence Structure unignice conformated, as among the Grecians, a Evolution 2, variant doct, and not helies e thereby to fee out the worth and dignity of moral Sentences and Apophithegus, tending to inflution, and direction, in matter of life and manners: as among all other fullyiefs deferring the preeminence, as also, among all men, to país with authority, and the sentence of and without control. This is the common opinion; which and without control. In 18 18 the common opinion; which I am not againft. But it may be as probable, that Sentenses were at first so called, from the ranck and place of the authors themselves. For in ancient times (whereas somewhat hat been faid in the Preface:) they were for the most part Governours, or fuch at left, as were thought fit to govern, whole fayings were received for Sentences. Whence it is, as I conceive, that Sentences, in general; or more particularly, choyce Sentences, are called Chap. 8. 6. that is, Princes ; properly; and 22,20. magnates : tribuni ; that is, Great men, or Chief Officers : as we shall fay there. See also upon Chap. 16. 10. A Divine Sentence is in the lips of the King, &c. And Quincilian, an ancient mafter of Rhetorick, one of the most judicious that ever wrote; where he treats of Sentences, faith judicious that ever wrote; where he treats or Sentences, lutin well: Asqui enim dece es in quibus est authoritas, ut ve jon-dus etiam persona construct. Quis enim serat, puerum, aut ado-les entulum, aut etiam ignobilem, &c. that is, It becomes them best (to ule Sentences:)that are men in or of authority, that the dignity to the Sentences, what are measure or automity, one we dignify of the person also may add some further weight to the matter. For who would endure a child, or a youth, or some obscure mean fellow, to pronounce sentences in his ordinary salk, and to take upon him the authority of an Instructor, or Teacher ? The Greupon him the authority of an injurieur, or teacor? Into Gre-cians also falled Sentences, product quod finites funt couffilis, (I think he mean feitis: for fo is the word produm used:) aut decretis: as the same Quintilian. Certain it is, that an-ciently many were the authors of Sentences, who also were of Lawes : Hi non in foro, nec in consultorum atrio, fed in Pythagore tacito illo fantioque scessii, didiceruni jura, que storenti tune Sicile, & per Italiam Grecie ponerent; saith Seneca, speaking of fome ancient Law-makers. The fecond fignification of the verb (but in another conjugation : ) is Similis fattus eft : and (in Hipbil, as they call it; ) comparavit, us pattus qu: and (in tupbut, as they call it; ) comparavit, affinilavit: that is, He was made like; He did likes, or compare. Hence some conceive that the proper signification of mass or masshal, is, similitudo, parabola: a similitude, or generally, for all manner of fentences, or moral precepts, though (for the language) never fo plain and direct. But I though (for the language) never to plant another. Sub-will not further enquire into the reasons: certain it is, that both here and elsewhere in Scripture, the word massall is to taken: not for a Proverb, properly so called, which implyes a common speech, sententious, with comemiar extraordinary (according to the propriety of every Language, some affecting rimes, some allusions, and others, some other thing) in the expression; but also any moral precept, instruction, or observation; such as are many in this book, which bearets the title of Proverbs. However, it doth not follow, that because of the Inscription, every thing in the book, should be Proverbs; since it is ordinary enough to make inscriptions a majore parte. The first nine Chapters are by many accounted rather as an Introduction to the whole book, then as part of the Proverbs. Indeed they do not contain many Proverbs, but the praises and commendation of wildom, in general : that is the jubjed; whereof fee what hath already been faid in the Pre-face, From the tenth Chapter to the end, there is little else but Proverbs and Sentences. Again, there be, who think thefe first nine Chapters to be here exhibited as they came from Solomon, himself, without any alteration of either matter or method: but those that follow, to be collections: of mattone i out time trait retrom, to be collections; of which more falls be fait upon Chapto-1. Others, with more probability, that the fix first veries of this Chapter; are not Solomons, but added by may of Preface or argument by them that made this collection, and fer i toru alvacad. For that, Solomon himself thould prefix his name and titles himself, is very sutable to the custome of those ancient times. There be very nurance to me cuttone or those ancient times. There be few books, of any great antiquity, whether in verse or profe, but begin with the authors name, his country, and pedigree, and other like circumstances; and this by the author himself, as all men agree. About the feas for this, and the following vertex, to verf, 20, and their coherence, there is no finall controverine among latterpreters; among whom (these that have written as large, I are the part of the part mean; ) a man shall founce: looke himself in the variety of Expositions; then find whater office too, in all that variety. Here will content our firet with this translation we have here, and the interpretate which is grounded upon it; is that hat good authority as any others fine principal Rebbins, and Mercents (the belt of all Expositors) has probation. According to then, their his the facility that words: As the next is fyread to the probation of the content of the probation of the content of the probation of to them, this is the fund of the words: As the net is fpread in vain; though note in vain, in regard of him that fpread it, who when the best of the present in the pread in the him to the best of the pread in the pread in the pread of the pread in the according contacts and sone intended; bur death not, for the tat avis; I that fome evil we hair, which it is greedy of; and part, being multiple hair, being intended to the souther, contact the southers of women general, the most animates themselves, under pretend impudency, include to infinance themselves, under pretence of love, and plantific hopes and archiverenents: when nothing but their animates are the words, better the second of t where they were, which donk extensate the wirkednessis of their parties, when the net in containing the catch and defloy parties in a boominable, but may cunningly be expended to the parties of the par Chap. i. it; which no man can think could be Solomons mean- | because of the neglect of these first motions and invitations of ing. But if this were it, indeed; there was a great milnature. Ariflotle treats of it at large in his Ethicles jib 3, cap 3, take, and misappreheafton of Solomon his aim. For certainand maintains, that though it be not in the power of many by the words, if rightly underflood, will afford as great an ag-gravation, as anythat is, or can be used, upon that occasion. For what can be said, or conceived more borrid of the most Cyclopaen men, as Poets call them, then that they should kill men as freely, and with that indifferency, as others kill birds, men as recely, and wan that indurrency, as other and union, not out of any milice, or tevenge; but for food, which no man thinks unlawful (except it he a Pythagorean), or makes any conficience of? What Solomon doub here experted under the finditude of birds, is by the Prophet Habskule experted by fifter; in those butter words of his expositiation with God, in point of providence: and beldeft by tangue, flight the behavior of the control when the wicked devoureth the man that is more righteous then he: when no whenge accounted the man that is more righteens that has claim madely men as the filter of the Sees, as the creating things that have no rules over them. They take up all of them with the angle; they catch them in their net, Rec. Hab. 1.74.

15. There is yet another interpretation of these words, which for the accurence of it, not altogether groundlesse, for else should not think it worthy of that title. I cannot pass by without fome notice. It is Salazars; who, to give him his due, hath done very well upon the Proverbs, and is the larwith these fears is but that he takes too much likery, and faffic from that winted it the "Act Add 9.5 h. i. Demosthenes, the ancient Orator, bath an excellent faying to this purpole; To you so meather mapa Thy disas, faith he, doopped to access opening to a control. Are rat; that is, For a man to proffer in the world above his defert, is very apt to beget strange opinions, and to pervert the mind of those, who other wife are not very wife of themselves. If instead of the turning away of the simple, we like better to translate, the ease of the simple; the sense, as to the whole sentence, will come cape of the purple; the tente, as to the whole tentence, will come to one; onely the two cautes before affigued of the finall and unter defluedion of men, their avertnelle from good countel, and their prospering in their wicked courses, will be now reduced into one, their ease and profperity: the other, though not experied there, may early be supplyers? the other, though from the former vertex, as hath already been thewed. Some Rabbines, as we are told here by Mercer, (who also calls it egyagium [an/am:) would have this affix pronoun, them, not reciprocally taken, of the fame; but as intended of others; to this effect: That that which makes wickeductic to prevail with the world, is, the profperity of fome known impious, ungodly nen: upon whom whileft other caft their eyes, and take no-tice, that notwithstanding their impiery, they thrive; nay, thrive and prosper (many of them, in sight,) by their impiery; they are encouraged to follow their examples, hoping to speed no worfe, then fuch and fuch , whom they have before their eyes. This indeed is the more certain and general cause of the two. For there be many wicked men, that do not profper in their wickednesse; and yet wicked still: so that their own prosperity cannot be said to be the cause. But there would be but little, or no wickednesse at all in the world, were it not for the prosperity of some, (in all places, and at all times, some; but fometimes, in great number; and then doth wickedneffe proportionably increase in the world;) whose wickednesse,unworthinesse, impiety, lewdnesse, hypocrisse, and the like, is as known and visible, as their prosperity is. And this is it that Solomon himself elsewhere doth avouch to be the cause of all

Much might here be faid out of Plato and other ancient Philosophers, concerning the nature and proprieties of true being : who bring many arguments to thew, that nothing that is material and visible; nothing that is temporary, hath a reality of being, or vinne; nothing that in temporary, and is tearly owing; of weight, or exidence, properly, but an appearance onely; or, at the mole, an improper, imperfed, equivocal (as Legicians are wont to fleak) being, of another kind, and quite different from true being; to which purpole. The fet therefore that delight in curely found at a many jun part, suffice us, to ground the interpretation of those merity. The fet therefore that delight in curely found at the processing may, in part, luttice us, to ground that interpretation of those words of Solomon upon, which we shall commend unto the Reader. First, St. Paul saith, we look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen; for the things which are feen, are temperal; ( mejskalpa; temperarie; but for a time, properly but the things which are not feen, are eternal. Secondly the fame Apostle (it is the opinion of many ancients, that he is the author of that Epiftle, though it is much opposed by some others) in his Epiftle to the Hebrews, chap. 10.34. doth mest elegantly oppole τὰ ὑπάρχοντα, (as commonly, but most improperly, even in the judgement of divers ancient Heathens, called) that is, worldly goods, wealth, or fubliance; to that wareful, so he calls it; which is the very word of Solomon. יש or, קושיה interpreted in Greek) or, fubftence, which is permanent and eternal. For ye had compassion of me in my is pointenent and took joyfully the floating of your costs, (like aparts, latth he, and took joyfully the floating of your costs, (like a parts) in latt under the cost of the parts) in latt under the cost of the latty, Solumon himself, of tiches and world-place. Then latty, Solumon himself, of tiches and worldly goods, faith directly, that they are not, Chap, 23.5. Wilt thou fet thine eyes upon that which is not ? for riches,&c. just as the ancient Greek Philosophers, and others, speak of them when they flyle them, a'vo napala; things that are not. All these things put together, I conclude, that by in this place, and by 299 in that other, Solomon doth intend fomeplace, and by By in that other, Solomon doth intend lone-what permanent and carral, that may truly be fail, to have reality of exidence, in opposition to transforey worldly goods. And what should that be, but certanal life Mod Rabbins, I know, by these words, understand the Law, which is in effect, as much a solomal widom; because found wisedom, is an effect of the knowledg of the Law: but that sents in not so proper the knowledg of the Law: out that tenie is not to proper here, neither to the place, nor to the word, taken in its pro-priety: neither is there want of Rabbins, that have embraced this fenfe, which I prefer before others. The author of Zobar, (a Book of great credit among the Jews: and of as great an siquity, if they may be believed; for which I will not passe my word) hath these words: what is yo? That world which is woods had the words when you is not their authority feetiles; that is, for teernal life. But it is not their authority that I truft too, or would have my Reader to ground upon: If there be not reason enough for this interpretation besides, shall nor presse him to imbrace it. But such passages as speak though but obscurely, of eternal life and rewards, I would make much of, because it is a subject in those days, among the Jews, but sparingly spoken of : whereof, see upon Pfal. 49. & 37. This is also very excellently well profecured by an ancient Holyman and Martyr, called Maximus Monachus, in his Divine Meditations, which he inferibed, Kspdnaua. Now to say with some that Solomon in all this had no further aim, then to diffwade from fornication and adultery, taken literally and properly; truly I think were to do him some wrong. It cannot be that so wise a man, so well acquainted with ancient Parables and allegories, in fo many reiterated expressions, should have no thought at all of of a thing (to a Philosophical contemplative man.) so obvious: and in very deed, in an allegorical way, of all allegories I ever met with, most proper and natural. Yet that this was his primary aim or intention, confidering to whom and for whose use he wrote these Proverbs, I would not say : nor make it the literal nmediate sense, as some do. As for that objection in Rabby Sol. that this were no great commendation of the Law of God, if it did onely deliver from fornication and adultery; we answer; First, that it doth norfollow from the words here, or any other, where the same matter is spoken of. Why this is here more particularly mentioned, and infifted upon, hath already been showed in the Preface. Not to question therefore, the pro-priety or pertinency of the allegory, to this place; that which I slick at, is, how tomake these three verses in the prosecution of the faid allegory, or allegorical exposition, to hang together, which I confesse is more then I can well do my self, or can say, that I have yet met in any other, what I thought fatisfactory. the propriety of una creature, as tony accentence domains, what is thought indisactory, by the Consider, as to put of all fenfect binnelly, to of hupoint waters and prime own eight, when they find their time. Tecence is noted to have full in a ciece well, and not individually, which their middone that which no man were before him did, that is, to have preprietated most of that profession, doing from each of niget anulty. But it was the Poets ingenuity, it is thought, to be the thing the propriet of the propriets are the propriets and the propriets are the propriets are the propriets are the propriets and the propriets are the prop as pure fountains, let a numerous iffus of well nurtured this pure fountains, let a numerous iffus of well nurtured this pure fountains, the numerous iffus of well nurtured this pure fountain the pure found in the firees about for the pure found in the firees about as for many clear riverers, to water and comfort by such allusions are very frequent in Scripture. There is also found in the service of the pure found in the pure foundaint in the fired in the pure foundaints of the fired in the pure foundaints, and as for five fired in the first fired in fired grid for in the Original Issuages.

It is not the fired in the fired fired in the pure fired I mean, as make a trade of their profitution; nor any port (ordinarily) of their intention, in their unlawful copulations. The fenfe therefore that they make of the words is good; but the expression seems to me rather enigmeticall, then allegorical : and though there is apparent reason why Solomon should expresse those things rather allegerically, then otherthould exprette thote times rather alter vically, the a other-wife, yet why to obleurely, and enignatically, I cannot im-agine. Neither is it the obleurity onely that I stick at, but the ambiguity. For what he faith in the fectord verie, in a more obvious construction, may feem to crosse the first; but v. 12. now next 4 1 row crucia was 1 to aclo [Fig.17,3.2.) more covenus constitution, may region to crucia the art 5, the Now he feeth his retrust, though the first.

And hence it is, that fome of old apprehending a manifest contradiction in the words, to reconcile them, did (upply a negative in the fecend verfe, Let not thy fountains be diferfed abroad, &c. So the Roman edition of the Septuagint; and so Aquila his translation, which is also followed by ancient Origen, and by Clemens Alexandrinus; as is obby ancient Origen, and by Clemena Alexandrinus; axis ob-ferred by Cornelius a Lapide, upon this place. Their con-fidentions as they make me to have the better opinion of the first interpretation; is they give me the liberty to cent about and fearch, whether any thing elfe may be cent about and earch, whether any thing elfe may be cent about time exceptions; that we have been first own their highest and the complete the control of the control of the first exceptions; that cannot fay that I have found what I ambiguity of early in the control of I shall here insurer rewould : but what I have thought of, I shall here impart to the readen. Why might not all this passage be taken literally, the reader why might not all this panage of taken inetally, as well as allegorically? That this expression, for a man to drive of his own well, or ciftens: (for both come to one, and the difference in the words is but little in the original:) is an the difference in the words is but little in the original? I had expredition of temporal peccan di happinelle, may appear by 2. Kings 18.31. easy every man of his som wine, and every one of his figure, and drink per every next be waters of his own cilem: repeared [18.36.16. And what a confiderable thing a well, or a fountain, was in ancient times, as by many other evidences, fo particularly may appear by the word fractr, brother : which originally came from the Hebrew 783 : but more immediatly (as all learned Linguists acknowledg) from the Greek фрвар, (Фрватир, фратир) which fignifics a well; as if commuψραφ, (ορεατής, φηστής) which ignites a wei; as if commining of the fame well, or fountain, (pagent came thence allo, and divers other words;) had been the greatest bond of union among men. At such times therefore such advice could not bethought impertinent: That every man that was a house-keeper, and mafter of a confiderable family, should be careful keeper, and matter of a connectance manny, mound be castent to provide himself of conveniency of water, both for his own safe, and to pleasure his poor neighbours: which no man, (to prevent firites and contentions, which often did arise about wells, and common waters,) might challenge an interest in, but himfelf. That this doth very naturally arife from the words. I think there will be no question; and many such precepts I think there will be no quettion; and many tuen precepts, or admentions there be in this Book, Mercerus shoth often obferve, that are merely Oceonomical: which they that do not obferve, and would be wifer then Solomon, turn into impertinent allegories. All the objection will be, which was against the first interpretation, why Solomon should incerpose this here, which is of a different argument from the reft of the Chapter. This would be somewhar, if there were not more to be objected against the common interpretation. We may cherefore answer, that this is no more, then what is done throughout the whole book, there being scarce any Chapter, fome one or two at the most excepted, where promiscuousness of matter, through the whole Chapter; or some such heterogeneous infertions, where the chapter runs most upon some one subject may not be observed. Besides, these Proverbs, as most are of opinion, being for the most part but collections, it is possible that the common name of well or fountain, though literal, in the one ; and allegorical in the other, might occasion this conjunction of different precepts or inftructi occasion this conjunction of different precepts or instructions. And florest he allegory of militude is grounded upon fome refemblance in the nature of the things, (which is particularly institute) upon and theread by fome Expedience: but more discretify, and of purpole; as they profes thankieve, prefed when the profession of the prof acc, initi one: ) it was not attogener improper, or inconfe-quent, from precepts concerning literal wells and waters; to país, to allegorical; and to put both in one Chapter. First, that Soand the tame is included, at was secured in the interval and a distance of the field of the field and the field of the fie are naturally endowed with more wishome, then men are,
The argument is a minore all majus; rather to shame us, then of nature, do fome acts of reason; how much more unexculable are we, who by God and nature are endowed with reason. of purpole, to provide for the future . to forecast, and to fore-fee, both for those things that belong to the body; as for those lomon; a friend, and a stranger. And to that end, some tranchildren; not that we would have them thought wife; but contactes; not that we would nave them thought wife; but that they that are, or should be, may be assumed, if in any thing they come short of the widome of such. Secondly; we say, that such acts in brutes proceed not from reason, proper-ly, or any ratiocinative faculty; but are infinites of nature, ly, or any ratioentative faculty; but are infinites of nature, imprinted in the phanife; and that what we call their prodence, is not theirs, properly to speak, but his providence, who is their Creator, and of Nature: whose power and providence, when we see such things in dumb creatures, we should, as Origin well observes, so much the more admire, who can produce some effects of reason and wildome, even from them, that are advice. I like either of these better, then their interpreta-nor rational, nor by nature, capable of any wisione. So tion, who by friend, would have the parry, for whom this directy is in trouble, underflood, as if he intended to say; an analogically novely. V. 12. A mayby pof m, a wicked mes, &c.] In this and the two next veries is feedown the character, or defeription of a nughty man, or, a man of Build, as it is in the original Hebrew. Most of the marks or evidences here expectled, are taken from the outward earriage, which therefore must not be taken as infallible, or necessary, a sid none were of that shape invariely, but these in whom the converted figure are application, or emphasize profession, or significant, or significant profession of the side of the marks of the side o figns or evidences do concur, are to be suspected, till better known. Such a description, from outward figns I mean, of a naughty man, we have in Martial, Crine ruber, niger we, &c, Rem magnam pialias Zoile, it bouts es, Some objects a coherence of of matter between the former paffage, and this: because it lewdnesse and wickednesse; which is true enough; but that Solomon, in this connexion of passages, aimed at it, I will not

But we must distinguish between a natural kind of winking, which may proceed from weaknesse of eyes, or some such inward bodily cause: (Pliny makes frequent winking, to be a sign of timerouinels; Plerifque naturale eft ut nictare oculis non ceffent, quos pavidiores (if accepimus, lib. 11. 37.) and hath no dependency from the heart or mind; and thet which is occasioned by the motions and suggestions of the mind, and inward thoughts. motions and luggetions or me ming, and innear trougents.

Certainly, when there is much winking in a company, there is expredion, is onely to make us fentible, that whipping, sec. is just cause to suppose that all is not right; and at the best, if no small since many think; but of hainous consequence, and there he no wickedness is the mind, yet there is incivility in by God himself extremely detected. To speak roughly, and to be full of gesticulations in com-pany, are of themselves bad signs, and to be avoided; yet it is pany, are or themselves both gus, and to be avoided; yet it is possible, that both may be sometimes, where the heart is well affected. And on the contrary, none more dangerous and pernicious often, then those that are most filent, or most fmooth, both in tongue and carriage, when in company. So that Cato (that Cato, who is taught to children, but of whom old men, and learned men may learn, without any diparagement, his advice is not amis, when he saith, Demiss animo, ac tacitos vitare memento: Qua flumen glacidum eft fusan later However, and the contraction of the chapter of the contraction of the chapter of the chapter of the contraction of the chapter I do not conceive that this was it that Solomon aimed at, nor that his words should be taken and pressed op precisely, as it into a pressed open circles, as it is intended positively to maintain, that sowing of discord was a greater sin, then any other here mentioned. I take it rather, to be a rhetorical(as I faid before) amplification, or aggravation; whereof there might be the more necessity, because many that offend in that kind, by whifpering, carrying of tales; (fome, to ingratiate themfelves; others, out of an evil cuftom, and a pleafute they take in prating) and the like, do not apprehend what a fin they commit, nor to what judgements, be-cause out of the reach of humane laws and censures, they expose themselves and their families. V. 29. So be that goth in to his mighbours wife] Most ancient Fathers take these words not of adultery committed; but of outward familiar conversation by way of ordinary friendship of ourward familiae senverbation by may so' ordinary friendthip and acquaintance, with another mans wife; a sift Solemon later, and in the fermer series, addetfied his fpeech to them, who (as doubteff many do) frequent and love the company of forme senten, no tour of any evil intention or purpole, either to the company of the company terpret this gotto in, here; then the sense or the former would must be, that as a man samot take fire into his bofome; nor go upon hot coals, but he shall be burne: fo it is as impossible that a man (such a one especially, as Solomon speaks to, young ents a man (litch a one especially, 28 30 000000 spears to, young and lufty, &c.) should long converte (by way of company keeping, must be understood,) with 2 woman, (especially, if wanton, and becuriful; 3nd cunning, withal,) but the fire of low, will knissed in himse 1st, for thet by degrees the shall be drawn to that which at first be would not have thought. This is the more probable, because it is very ordinary for all Writers, Poets especially, to compare beautiful women to fire: as he in that Comick, Accede ad ignem hunc &c. and divers others. However, I conceive that there is not leffe ground for the former interpretation, from the context, and other-

But the authours of this interpretation contrary to the current of interpreters, might have done well, to have howed, that the original word 27 is ever taken for contempt in this kind ; which, I take, is more then they could. The more fate therefore and more received interpre-tation is that Solomon doth hear aggravate the crime of adultery above ordinary their. The comparison is very proper, adultery it felf being a kinde of theft, and fo called ordinarily by Latines and Grecians (furtum, furtive nuptie, yauxonagπΘ; κοι but as a theft of a higher nature; fo, tubject (among the Hebrewes at left) to much more danger and ignominy, the recommendation of much more camper and agreement, then ordinary leaking. But though thefe was not properly punished by reproach; yet it was a feproach doubtiels, and a great reproach too, to be convicted of it. This therfore must not be understood absolutely, but comit. Since the Hebrew Text hath been better understood, most men have been of that opinion, that the Greek Translation was right enough, at first; but fince that, either of purpose, was right enough, at hit; but lince that, either of purpose, or cafually by reason of the affinity of the words, deprayed; that is, that whereas they had rendred it, extince us (with an ham and the state of the st that is, that whereas they had tendred it, extrust use (with an if tom xxio politios), that is, politifed me: it had been made afterward, know use (with an if tom xxio ); that is, created me. V. 26. The righteom is more excellent then his neighbour, but the way of the wicked seduceth them ] To more excellent, beres is by some, (as Mercer and others; and so by our margin here.) rendred abundant : and fome thatfollow this translation, make this fense of the whole, (which is agreeable enough to divers other places of Scripture, ) that the just and godly shall abound in all good things, when the wicked, through their may, or wickednelle, shall erre, or wander for want ; that is in way, or wickednelle, final leve, or wander for want; that is in cited final log. I do not fee, but his may do well enough: certain it is, that the felterew __jpinj here, and by medic represers, expectedled feltents them, may as well be transfared, coajets them to vere; or to wander. Yet failured him once generally exceeded, for all fixed a the winder of warmenable fenis; to windien a continue where the first of the first own the winder of the continue was of the decision of the continue was of the decision for the thirt wicked life, leads the continue and feducies have from the truth set, teans mem to destruction; or that that where life; leads them to wicked opinions, and feducers them from the truth, though right before in their faith. And this may be the fend of this latter part, whether we translate execution; or abundant in the first. But if excellent, Rabbi Kimki makes the fende of the whole (and this too, not improbable :) this: That righteoufnesse is of it felf, a more noble thing then unrighteoufness, and more commendable, few or none make any question: and by consequent, that a righteous man is more excellent on: and by contequent, that a fighteous man is more excellent then his neighbour, or any other that is not righteous. What then is the cause, that so few apply themselves that way, to follow his example? Because they see, that (Virtus laudator by alget? as one of the Poets.) though justice be commender aigst: as one of the Poets; ) mough juttice be commend-ed and commendable, the most men thrive in the world by in-justice. To this purpose see more upon Chap. 1:32. For the turning away of the simple,—and the professing of fasts that de-troy them. The Vulgar Latin (which some take upon them to justific as the most genuine sense: profunde & germane, saith Cornelius a Lapide, which I wonder at : ) expressent it : Qui negligit damnum propter amicum, jufius eft. It doth afford them that follow it, sufficient matter of discourse (and so their vonat rollow it, lumicent matter or officourie (and to trief vo-lumes come to swell;) how a man is bound to neglech his own profit, or advantage for his friend, or neighbours sake. There may be good use enough of that speculation; but as to Solomons words, I conceive it altogether impertinent.

V. 24. The flothful man rofteth not that which he took in hunt-ing As if a man should say; I am not the richer for any thing you ever gave me; the meaning may be, either not the richer because it did not thrive with me; or, because you never gave me any thing: (o here, rogeth not; either when he heh hit; lets it spoil, or be lost through negled and lazinesse: or, rogeth not, because through lazinesse he will not sake the pains to hunt, or to hunt diligently, and fo gets nothing : which, of the two, is the most probable interpretation. In ancient times, before men were incorporated into towns and cities, hunting was a principal object of mans industry; and it is very likely that the Latin word fludium, came originally from the Hebrew 7773 which fignifieth to bunt. Moft likely neverthelde, (as moß are of opinion) that the words are to be taken proverbielly, to this effect, that as it often fells out, that they that have taken great pains in hunting, and have got fomewhar, yet through foune either fuddain chance happing to their own person, as either death or sicknesses, or some other calualty, through which they are bereaved of their prey, they eat not of it : fo it is with the wicked mans wealth, which though he scrapeth and heapeth together with much labour, yet he doth not at all, or, not long, enjoy. This to be the right meaning of the words, most Interpreters agree; but for the truth of the fentence, it must be remembred, (as hath been 16: or that resum.

V. 20. As he that taketh away a garment in cold weather This fentence doth admit of two contrary fenfes and interpre and statistics of which, which is the study, when both the words, and the nature of the thing will admit of either, is hard to destraine. We shall therefore propose both, and leave the chirac to the Reader. But first of niter and vineger it must chojec to the Reaser. Buthrier in the fan owneger to that be known; that anciently they were often, and upon feveral occidents (as by the tellimonies of feveral ancients, diligently collected by Salzars, and fome others, doth appear +) joyned together; and in fome cafes, vineger adds virtue; in chara, it reks away from the niter. Now the Hebrew word here used 17322 as it doth fignife to put any or adam: 10 bers utid 3 months and doch lignile to put m, or adorn : load to a tide, so take show. The finite herefore may be : Ask a that puts on a gatness in sold breather, and tempers rainer (as in diversity and polyfical) : or tempers it, to take away whe force of it, which Allifords faith it doth, being of a horrary nature; John bringer, I so that finger th fourty nature, John bringer, to a better finger the fourty nature, John bringer, to a most proper, and festionable; of it Musick, or Gange, &c. That Heidel, in general; and fonge, particularly, that are fired to the code, to conforte and or crivic, may do much with many (for all are not of one comper) to allay forcers; before what we read in the Scripture to that purpole, as of Saul, 1 Sam, 16.24 and of others elfewhere; dayly experience may fufficiently fatisfie. This lenfe is followed by Junius, and some Rabbins: approved also by Cornelius a Lapide, and some others. But as we said before, all men are not of one temper not equally affected to, and with Musick: nor all Musick, of nor equally affected to, and with Mulick; nor all Mulick, or one kind; a nad three be degrees of forew too. As true elements, or be generally spoken) that Musick, or finging of fongs, (which for the most pare are a testimenty of a light learn; ) is very unstandantile to an incorp beart. And to this effect, it feems were Solomons words underflood by Sirach, the author of Ecclesations; of whose imitation of Solomon, we have spoken in the Preface. For fo be : A tale out of feawe may repowed the treatment. For ione: A late one of lea-on, is as March is mourning, &c. Chap, 22.6. The anci-cient Grecians sho had a Proverboo this very purpole, as by Druffus upon this very place is well observed: "Ou vallax xoxullatin, ou rupe sin. And Plutarck in his Symposa, or And Plurack in his Sympolia, or Tablesalles, except signiff Euripedes for his contrary Judgment: 8 page, 7, Sueff, 7, ss I find him cited by the fame Drufius, in the fame place.

V. it. If think enemy be hungry, give him bread to eat ; and if be be thirfty, give him water to drink ] Exod. 23. 4. Rom. 12.

V. 22. For thou shalt heap coals of fire upon his bead ] Plat. 140.10. Thou shalt bring Gods vengeance on his head, and Gods blessing on thine own. So most interpreters, both upon this place, and upon Rom. 12. 20. where this Proverb is used : or rather, this very paffage, cited by the Apostle. So most, later Interpreters ; and fo divers, if not most ancients roe, collected by Salazar upon this place. But this feems to be too uncharitable an interpretation, and contrary to what in this very book of Proverbs, Chap. 20. 22. & 24.29. and elsewhere, (whereof fee more upon Plal. 26. So will I compass thine altar, &c. and Pfalm.35.4. Let them be confounded, &cc. ) is commanded. For what greater revenge, or more malicious hatred can there be, then for a man either to with, or to use means, that his enemie may incur the wrath of God; the utmost of evils, and most direful imprecations? Divers things, I know, are animered by divers; but nothing that fatisfies me to much, as St. Chrysoftomes aniwer; which is, that Solomon, and atter him, St. Pauls intention was not by these words to allow, much less to command fuch vindicative policy; but because most men in the hear of their anger, are incapable of any other reason or consideration, but what tends to revenge; this by way of condescention is proposed unto them for the time, that if they must needs be revenged, and nothing else will content them; this is the onely way to turn the wrath of God from themselves upon their enemies, not to revenge our selves, but themicaves upon their enemies, not to revenge our feives, blut to leave them to God, and rather to require good for evil: that afterwards when the edg of their anger, and the danger of their fury, is taken away; they may be perfwaded to do that out of charity, which before they did out of mere policy. But if there be danger in this interpretation, as certainly there is, and matter of feandal too; why should not we rather prefer that which may be as proper to the words, and much fater, fer that which may be as proper to the words, and much faire, for the fenfe? Which is seconding to St. Auflers golden rule, wheteo the gives an inflance, their every words of Sommon. Sprategives lectured pf, thin he, and Registims and plateast own whiched the properties the state of the position of the state of the but that the words are figurative; and whereas they admit of two feveral interpretations; the one, tending to evil, the other to good: let thy charity rather imbrace that which is to good; that thefe coales of five thou mayeft understand to be nothing elle, bur the burning groanes of hearty repentance, whereby his pride is healed, who grieves with himfelf, that he hath been his enemy, who was fo good, as to endeavour his good, whileft he did him evil; So Sr. Augustine. Others by coales of fire, understand such , by which the fire of love and charity is kindled in the heart. Did net our bearts burn : Luke 24.12, in a different fenfe, it is true, but that too figurative; and in a good fenfe too. Of a live coal, taken from the altar, to take away iniquity, we read Efay 6.6,7. And the word here ufed, feems to have particular relation to the altar, or cenfer, which from thence was called 71970. But of this from cold causes, by applying coales to the head. St. Augustine indeed, in one of his Sermons, seems to apprehend it so. Others would have it a comparison taken from founders, or casters of wound mave a a comparison taken from sounders, or enterest or metal, who by adding much fire, will make the hardest iron, or fleel at last to melt. A probable conjecture; but that it doth not fatisfie, why the head particularly, not the heart, or any other pare, frould be mentioned. But it is a very difficult thing, to give a reason of old Proverbs, when as some rimes fome extraordinary chance, for which no reason can be given, but that it hath to hapned, is enough to give occasion to a Proverb. If a house both great and high, be on fire, coals and finders, as I have seen it my self, will slye very far; so that if a man be neer, he shall be forced to stand further off, or to cover his head with somewhat, more then ordinary; as I think Pliny oth relate of himfelf, or his Uncle, in the burning of mount Vefuvius. Some such thing, spoken of some one at first, that was not willing to go from his house, though on fire, rill the against their wills are forced to do somewhat or other, which of themselves they are most averse from. Such a thing is, when againd their wills are forced to do fomewhat or others, which if the full will be the forced to do fomewhat or others, which is the full beautiful to the full beautiful beautif my fon, &c. So he. Seneca : Vincit malos pertinax bonitas, nec quifquam tam duri infestique adverfus diligenda animi est, ut etiam wit traffus honor non amet : that is, Pertinacious goodnelle will surrence exil men: neither is any man (o rivid and perverfe against that which of its felf is lovely, that even when he is drawn by force, that matter of its jet is the stare good. Among later Interpreters, (though moft, as hath been faid, for the contrary,) yet Mercer is for this interpretation: and likewife Drusius in his Hebrew Proverbs, Claffe 11.1. 1. Beneficentia erga inimicos. See alfo

ECCLESIASTES.

Ecclefiastes, Or, The Preacher.

The Argument.

THE Author of this Book both by the Style, and by the Title of it appeareth to have been Solomon, fince independent of David was King in Jeculalem, but he. He ferment to have written it in his old a Age, which betwok a more ferious view, of his paft Life. The Honours, pleasfores, wealth, wildome, he had so abundantly enjoyed: The Errors and missarriages which be had falled into: the Large experience, and many observations in bad made, of things Natural, Moral, Domestical, Civil, Sensual, Divine & the Curious and Critical inquiry he had made after true happinesse, and what Contribution all things under the Sun could afford thereunto. Concernnau make after the compute fire and work controlution an long; mater the standard after anterentia. Concern-ing which, Heddh, 1. In the general discover the unter vanity and infulficiency of all things there below to comake amon Blessed, in regard of their mundle nature, of their Weaknesse and disproportion to the Sout of max: of the Wearinsse which is contacted by the studying of them: and the Impossibility of over drawing from them more their bath benssormerly extracted; and configuratify the similes attempt of any that should over often go about to receive Satisfaction from them. 2. He demonstratesh this General proposition touching the most Vain Vanity of all things under the Sun, by an Induction of those particulars, from which, above all others, men usually expect the greatest Contentment. Those are, 1. Wisdome and Knowledge both natural and moval, for inquiry whereinto no grensy constraint. I note it, it requires and fronger inclinations in him for the more fitting provisions and all filters that the state of the great reflection in the limit of the defeate; and yet after all he cancellath. That the solution and knowledge do his encrede Grief and forceth, if he are they from him for all the concluded. That the limit one and Knowledge do his encrede Grief and forceth, if he are they from him for fitting fuch bleffedness to the food, as may fully satisfie the defires thereof. 2. Plasswers and Dubbes, which he had as much advantage by his greatnesse to Eujoy, and by his wisdome to Examine, as ever any other man should have a and yet all the content he expected from them, did sud in hatred of them, and despair of ever mending his condition by them. 3. Honour, greatnesse, and power in the world, concerning which, he showeth that it is so far from making men Happy, as that without the fear of God to correct and temper it, it is the occasion of much wickednesse to thofe that have it, and of much mifery to thofe that fuffer under it: It usually breaking forth into oppression and violence, whereby men in power carry themselves like beasts towards their brethren, and shall themselves dye like beafts, undefired, and unlamented. It being likewise matter of much discouragement to men that are oppressed by it, making them weary of their lives, carelesse of their labours, resolved rather upon quiet idlenesse, then upon enis manage that we do get what they can privately to themselves, then having been publish yieful, to be re-payed with no other Rewards then wrong and dainger: by which means Society and Community of services amongs, men, so greatly beneficial to publick interest, are offerwised and dissolved. A. An outward form of Religion and of Divine worship, into which solish men by carnal considence, and superficial performances, do also pur describ vanities, and make even Gods fervice unufeful to their Happineffe. 5. Riches and great poffessions, which are fo far from satisfying the heart of man, as that they occasion more cares, lesse sleep, tesse quiet, are snares and occasions of much flurs to the conners of them, who, living, possessing the mith forcors, and dying, pair with them with wrath and indignation: Having little benefit by them in their life, as having not power to enjoy them; nor in their death any comfort from them, as leaving them to they know not whom being not at all exempted by them either from mifery or mortality.

And having thus discovered the vanity of the principal things from whence the Heart of man might have expetted fat ufallion: He doth therenpon prescribe many excellent means for healing and abating of that Vanity, and for procuring tranquility unto the mind, and peace and comfort to the life of a man. Such are, Contentation of heart in the firest and free Enjoyment of all outward Bleffings, with thankigiving and in the fear of God. Quiet and Humble Acquiescency under the holy and powerful providence of God, in all the Events which befall is in the world. Sincerety of beart in his Worship, and presdent piety in our vower, prayers, and addresses unto him. Patience of spirit under all the oppressions we meet with in the world. A composed preparednesse of mind to undergo sorrous of pirit mater au temperijono wenter with in the words. A compige a prepare angle of manu want and officials. Prudent and pious moderation of spirit in our behavious rowned all men, that so we may preserve our names from Calumie, and our person from danger. Askehoess, Cobicty, Pasience iowards such at offend, considering Common fraisty, and our own weakness. Sobriety of mind, contenting our selves with a mitastive of mind. Practical Prindence, which this render no brantisful in the eyes of others. Loyalty and obrdience towards Magistrates, that our lives may not be made uncomfortable by their diffleafure. Wisdome to discern of time and judgment. Prepareduesse of heart against inevitable evils. Submission to the Hoty and invincible Providence of God, admiring his works, adving his Judgments. Joyful frutto of Comforts Conscionable and industrious Walking in our particular Callings. Wildome how to carry our felves amidft the many Cafnalties which meet in in the world, fo as that we may by our lojalej towards Superiours decline the danger of dipleasure from them: and by our Charley to Inferience; lay up

Therefore in this enquiry, the duration of the good, is as requifite to be confidered as the quality of it; whether it will continue with a man as a flay quanty of it; whether it will continue with a man as a jusy and comfort to him all the dayes of his life. Nothing will do this but godlineffe, Pfal, 92.13,14. There can be no time; no condition in a mans life, wherein the fear of God will not be comfortable unto him.

Here we observe; 1. That in all these inquiries Solomon begins with his heart, thereby noting unto us, that the good which must fatisfie a man, must bear proportion to his heari, and to his inward man. 2. That he tempers his pleasures and his pains in feeking knowledg, together; teaching thereby, but to mitigate the bitternesse and pains of severer fludies thereby. 3. That a man hath never greater need of the bridle of wildom, then when he is in purfuance of carnal delights 4. ### CHAP. VI.

N this Chapter is continued a further description of the common vanity of riches, in the hands of a coverous person. He is here fet forth,

First, By the good things which he hath; 1. Riches in a. bundance, riches and wealth. 2. Honour, and both to the ADDOTATION OF THE PROPERTY OF name is odious, verf. . 4. He hath not feen the Sun, nor known any thing: theother hath indeed feen the Sun, but hath feen no good, nor krown any thing but forrow and vexation, and at last goes to the fame place, verf. 5, 6. This vanity

First, By the narrow use of riches, and all the labour converfant about them; it terminase in the body; it cannot fatiate the minde nor appetite; that is fevil and coverous, infatiable; the minde not appeare; much not evil and coverous, matabale; if wile and prudent, above fatisfaction by these things, vers. 7.

That they cannot satisfie the minte, appears, because then wile men might finde our some more good in them then sools; but the wifett can have no more out of hem, then for their snouths, and so have fools, and the poorest men that know how to live, as well as the richest, vers. 8.

Secondly, By the vanity of wandring and endleffe defires : the wife, the foolili, the rich, the poor have things prefent and necessary, so long as they live, they have enough to that use: and this is a real fruit, much better, then to let the heart wander and weary it felf in endleffe defires, verf. o.

Thirdly, By the impossibility of mending a mans condition Amony, by the importantly or mending a mans condition by thefe things, order rising him above the flate of mortality and infirmity. Aman will be but a man how rich foever he be, and all his wealth will not guard him against the evil sincident to humanity, verf. 10. He will be still never the better

Fourthly, By theignorance of man to make the best use of hings, and to resolve himself, whether a great, or a moderate eftate be better for him; especially confidering the shortnesse of his life, and the ignorance of what will become of his efface or family after he is gene, verf. 12. Thus we may connex the two last verses, with the argument of those before: or rather we may take them for a general conclusion of all the precedentvanities, fince so many things there are which increase vanity, what is man the better forthem, vers. 11. For first, amongst them all, he can hardly know what is good for himfelf. 2. I them an, he can hardly know what is good for himidir. 2. It he do, he can enjoy that good but a little while, his very life (the beft outward bleffing he hath) is vain, and but a shadow.

3. When his life is over, he shall be never the better for any 3. Wen aus me is over, are man pernever interested on any thing which comes after him. 4. Neither can he pleafe him-felf with the fore-fight of what shall be after him, because he cannot tell it to himself, neither can any man els declare it to

CHAP. XII.

N this Chapter, the Wife man proceedeth to demonstrate the Vanity of youth and old age, which both quickly run into Death . And then concludeth the whole Book,

He had before by an Emphatical Ironie, deterred Young men from those inordinate passions. and fensual pleasures, which that slippery age is most subjectunto, and that by the Consideration of that dreadful accompt which in the last Judgement God will require of them. And because that age of all other is most apt to put the evil day far from them, and to look on death and Judgement as at a great diftance , (as evil men ufe to do, Ezek. 12.27. 2 Pet. 3.3, 4. Amos 6. 3.) therefore he doth by a prolepfis prevent that shift; Young men might be apt to fay, the things you presseus unto are good, but we shall have time enough before Judgment come, to think of them, old age will be a fit fealon to draw off from the world, and to draw nigh to God. V. 6. Or ever the filter cord be loofed, or the golden v. 6. Or ever the fitter Cord be loosed, or the golden bowle be broken, or the pitther be broken at the fountain, or the wheel broken at the ciflern.] Some understand this verse literally. 1. Of the ornaments. 2. Of the more needfull inframents of life, whether they be more obvious and easie to come by, as to draw water out of a vious and easie to come oy, as to draw water out of a Fountain with a pitcher; or more remote, which are not gotten without jabour and coft, as the drawing of water out of a deep Well with a wheel and a chain. And in out of a deep Well with a wheel and a chain. And for the meaning runs hus. Remember the treater in the days of 197 Taulib, before God firip thee of thine orac ments wherein thou more rejoyeeft, Thy place, chaines, rings, jeeds, successive which will then be too heavy for thee to west, no layers be majoring posting against 3. Before he loops there of the other Helps and Commadities of life, and make both thine extraordinary orna-ments, and thine ordinary utenfils all ufeleffe unto thee: or haply in this fenfe the former clause may relate unto or haply in this fente the former chaute may relate this vield men, Lee not thy filver and gold bewitch thee: the latter unto meaner men, Let not thy pitcher and thy wheel take off thee from minding the things of another and a better life. Others carry on the Allegary, make-ing these things figurative and elegant expressions of death, and of those evills which immediately forego it, to wit, the diffolution of those parts which are most vital : for death, as in the forming or battering of a Garrison, for death, as in the ttorming or battering or a Garrison, doth first break and weaken the outworks, the bodily states, and outward furses, and after that sets upon the imworks, and the Vitals. He here compareth Life the imworks, and the visus. He here compared when the draw water with a Cod, a bowle or bucket, a pitcher, and a wheal. And as when these are broken we can draw water no more, fo when the Vital parts are decayed water no more, to when the wini parts are decayed, there is no hope longer to draw life into the body which is the Ciftern. This Life he compares, for the pretion/resse of it, unto sitver and gold, for the weaknesse and fragility of it, unto a pitcher, and for the inflability and unfertiednelle of it, unto a wheel.

Now befides this general proportion between life and thefe things as the figures of it, Interpreters do make the particulars here mentioned to answer unto some particu-

particulars nere mentioned to animet unto ionie particulars in the Viral parts of the body:

1. By the filter Cord., they understand the marrow or pith of the back, continued from the brain as it were in a pikh of the kack, continued from the brain as it were in a cord of fiting unto the bottome of the back bones, and for the white colour of it, compared unto filver. It may also be applyed unto all the other Sizers and Ligaments of the body, which from the head, as the Fountain, conveigh frase and motion upon the other parts. Here-by also may not unfitly be understood the chain and fweet harmony of the Elements and humours in the bowhich being preferved in its due proportion, the body doth receive life from the Soul which is the Spring thereof, but being once diffolved, life preferrly fail-

2. By the Golden bowle, they understand the Menius or skin wherein the brain and visall powers thereof are contained as in a bowle. Others understand the blood which is in the heart, as in the pretious Fountain of life. Schindler rendreth it, Scaturigo Auri or aurea, and would have us thereby to understand the Law of God, which is compared unto Gold : but the word is elfewhere water is compared unto soils: but the word is ellewhere used to fightific a vessel, Zach.4-2.3.

4. By the fountain, we may understand those principal parts from whence Viral supplyes are drawn into the body, as from the Head, Sense, and motion; from the Heart, Spirits, and hear, from the liver, blood.

4. By the pitcher, and the wheel, those Infirumentall and subservient parts, which from these conveigh those supsuplervient parts, which from these converge those sup-plyes into the several vessels of the body, as into a Ci-fletin, as the vibins blood from the Liver, the arteries spirits from the heart, the Sinemer motion and sense from the brain. By all which we should learn to draw water the brain. By all which we mount team to craw water of life out of the Wells of idention, that out of out belly may flow rivers of fiving water, through the condinual fupplyes of the Spirit of erace, the all out fiving may be in Christ, and our life hidden with him in God, 16. 14.3. & 66. 11, 12. V. 11. The words of the wife are as goades, and as nailes, fassened by the Massers of Assemblies, which are gi-ven from one shepherd. 3 Before, he shewed the Internal Quality of the doctrine taught in the Church; here, he theweth the use, vertue, Efficacy and Authority thereof, and that by Two excellent Similitudes.

First. Of Geades, sententious and concise parables and wife Sayings , have a notable actimen in them to ftirre up the heart unto attention, and to urge our fluggith af fections forward unto Obedience, as the goad quickens the Oxe unto labour. This is the nature of found and spiritual doctrine, it searcheth, pricketh, and exstimuand ignitual doctrine, it tearement, priceeth, and extinum-lateth the hearters of it unto Duty, doth not fixter any, in their fine, or fecurity, but rouzeth them up, and awaken-eth them, Pfal. 45, 5.118. 49.2. Some read the words thus, The words of the wife are as goades, and as nayles federed, They are the Mafters of Collettions, or the choyceft and most principall Collections, unto which no other writing is to be compared , unto which all other learning is to be an handmaid, to wait upon it, and to be subservient unto it: and thus they are a further commendation of the Scripture, from the excellency and preeminency of them above all other wriothers thus; As goades, and as nailes fixed, quibus finat Coagmentationes or Collections, so that the nailes are the Masters of the Collections, according to the former sense; They who forsake the Word, have fcatter'd, broken, disjoynted, discomposed minds and affections: But the Word is of a knitting, and uniting rections: But the words of a kinting, and uniting vertue, Ephel, 4-12, 13, 14, 15, 16. Col. 2.19. Others, by this expression, understand those who did collect the doctrine of the Holy men of God, and compose them in brief Summaries for the use of the Church: such as were the fervant of Hezehiab, Prov. 25.1 like unto that College of wife and learned men, whom Justinian the Emperous min and retried men; whom Jutiman the Emperous Imployed in gathering into one Body or Pandect the Abridgment of the civill Lawes: and likewife those Doctors and Patfours of the Church, whose work it is to fasten these naties in the hearts of the people by their Ministery; as Peter did in theirs to whom he preached, Act. 21.37. These are all very found and mutual confistent senses, which for subflance agree in one end, to shew the efficacy of the word. The Authority whereof is confirmed by the next clause,

First, There is no End of writing them; while one refutes what another wrote, another vindicates what his adversary diffiked. If happinesse were to be sought for in humane writings. The Volums are so instaile, the opinions so endlesse and various, that it would be impoffible for any man to find it out of them; when a man had with much curiofity, and continual reading, wearied himfelf, and pined his flesh away, he would finde it all an unprofitable, and an impertinent labour, weari-Therefore let these words, so few, and yet so full, be thy counsellors: He that will not be admonified by thofe, shall never be satisfied with any others: He that refuseth the Wheat, will be but chooked with the Chaff. On the Song of Solomon.

The ARGUMENOT.

T will not be needfull to fay much concerning this Book by Way of preface, because such things as are usually delivered so, will be very proper for the explication of the first verse of it, which is a compendious preface to all the rest, and contains under it not onely the nature and Author of it, but also the matter, time, occasion, end, and many other circumstances, which are the common businesse of an Arsument. All that needs of introduction here, will be rather for the Annotations sake, then for any thing elfe, and to vindicate them from rash and harder censures, which they are apt to meet with. It is not unknown to the learned, what the obscurity and darknesse of this Book hath ever been accounted, and what great variety of Interpreters, and Interpretations have indeavoured to clear it, but with so ill successe many times, that they have rather increased, then removed the cloud; whilest among so many hundreds of them very few have done any thing leffe then what they pretended, and of all those ancient and later Volumes, and Libraries of Commentators, we finde a very small number that are answerable either to their own undertakings, or the Readers hopes. The reason whereof is more easie to discover, then to remedy nor can me expect a perfect redresse untill we shall see face to face, and all these, and all other vails shall be removed. It is agreed on all hands, that the Book is an intire Allegory, full of profound mysteries, and secrets, for which cause the sews interdicted the reading of it, as of the sort chap, of Genes, and some parts of Ecclicity. until the age of 30. yeers, ( which was their Sacerdotall age ) when reason should be growen riper, and the affections composed, and raised for so divine a contemplation: For such they esteemed it generally, though both among them, as well as other Readers, there were some that had lower conceptions of it, and received it as an hot carnall pamphlet, formed by some loose Apollo or Cupid, rather then the holy inspiration of the true God. But this blafthemy hath perished with the fathers of it, and it is not now so much the dignity of this sacred Monument is questioned, as the sense of it; about which infinite digladiations and contentions have exercised all Ages of the Church, and whilest every one pleads strongly for his own Diana, it is become an harder work to understand, because of so many diversities of understandings. Tet it hath pleased God in so great confusion to preserve the main thing happily inviolable, and so far to subdue the reasonings of luxuriant wits, as whatever interpretation they have more specially advanced, yet that few or none of them have refused that which you Ball finde imbraced and improved here. It is very case for all men to erre even in plain things of this nature, how much more in parables and riddles? Where no Interpretation can be so sincere and indemnified as to please all conjectures, or to fatusfie the various interests and spirits that inquire into them: But in fo Catholike a con-Cent and harmony as hath born witnesse to this way, though in some particulars and single clauses it may be the Fate of the most perspicacious to be surprised, yet in that which is so universally and solemnly accepted, as it will feem a wilfull errour to depart from it, and to choose solitary, and dangerous by-paths where the open Road is Co free and fafe, so what can be expected in such fingularity but many absurdities, and implications, and violences offered to the word and Truth? And so Small he that considers finde it to have happened not onely to those of the Church of Rome, who have doted upon such inventions, but also to many of the reformed Churches, who have for faken all guides, but their own fancy and interest in this work. And indeed how could it prove othermile? For when men are grown proud disdainers of others, and propose to themselves a separate Notion, which they resolve to defend, what bold, improbable, insolent things will they not obtrude, and instead of anhumble submission and respect to the Text, will ravish it, and by an audacious force, compell and wrest it to comply with them? This fault, as I faid, we may lament in many of great parts otherwife among us, that were transported with strange abstruse applications of this Scripture, and have presumed to determine all things in it so and so, as if they had been of the Divine counsell, and knew all his secrets, by reason of which presumption, we may sadly fear that it pleafed God to give them up many times to themselves, and permit them to produce such opinions as are both rediculous, and impious. I know there may be a false and unlawfull reverence paid even to holy things, and that that is negligence often, & superstition which we call humility: I know God alloweth the learned a gracious liberty, and in difficult things to abound in their own sense is not alwayes to violate or pervert the faith: but yet again, he that undertakes such operations, must be sure to walk circumspelly, to bring as well submisse, as pure and holy speculations, and not to seek unusuall and rare, but solid and mature interpretations. He must remember that Allegories are not to be strained too much, that similitudes answer not in all lines, but in the chiefest: that many deep things concerning the Church lie hid in this Scripture, and in the Prophets, which are not yet fulfilled, nor discovered, and that what remains for the last times to be accomplishe, is yet as full of darknesse as wonder; known to God onely, and until he shall please to detenebrates it, unsearchable. He must remember laftly, that one part of his duty is as great as another, that it concerns him to be wife unto sobriety, as well as to be wife; to open doubtfull and intricate Scriptures with modely and moderation; that is according to the Analogy of Faith, the generall peace and unity of the Church, and those Christian Canons of charity, piety, loyalty, and prudence, which tend not to subversion, but to edifying : All which none are so likely to ob-Serve as they who most suspect themselves, and proceed in that beautifull tract, which the feet of the Prophets have both inlightned, and made smooth; which in this businesse under our hands, is to look upon it as generally it is acknowledged, that is, not as an history, or prophecy (as some conceive it ) but as a divine Parable, wherein natural and wijhle things allegorize things [insertant and and more the figures of Solomon and his Love, is shadowed the true Prince of peace, and his rich assessment to his Church and people. And thus is that genuine and spiritual explication, which as it is like Davids Tower defended with the soleds of the mighty, so it is most full of heavenly and divine benefit, and most instrumental to that great end, for which the Scriptures
